Byelections: Opposition 2, Tories 0

Liberal Simmons
. . . holds Burin

NDP's Hovdebo
. . . major upset

The Conservatives were defeated in two federal byelections, including the late John Diefenbaker's long-safe Prince Albert seat Monday, reducing the minority government's already shaky ability to win the confidence of Parliament.

The victories of Liberal Roger Simmons in the Newfoundland riding of Burin-St. George's and New Democrat Stan Hovdebo in the Saskatchewan riding of Prince Albert prompted some MPs to predict the government may soon call an election.

"You're going to have an election in a helluva a hurry," said Stan Korchinski, a Conservative MP from Saskatchewan. "We're just hanging on by our fingertips."

Dief's old seat goes NDP

Conservative MPs aided by their five Social Credit allies can muster 141 votes against 140 from the combined strength of the Liberals and NDP.

Opposition leader Pierre Trudeau sent a telegram to his new MP from Newfoundland saying the victory "warmed the hearts of Liberals across the country" and that the increased Liberal strength will "keep the Tories hopping" in the Commons.

Ed Broadbent, New Democratic Party leader, warned Clark that the Conservatives must be more obliging to the wishes of the opposition or "the government could come down."

The government's defeat in the two ridings makes it "very clear the people of Canada have sent the prime minister a message," Broadbent told reporters.

The biggest blow to the Conservatives occurred in Prince Albert, held by former prime minister Diefenbaker from 1953 until his death this August. NDP support had been growing in the constituency for several years.

New Democrat Hovdebo won 10,968 votes for an edge of 611 over Tory Kris Eggum. Liberal Clyde Harradance polled 7,321 votes.

"I'm sure Mr. Diefenbaker, wherever he is, is smiling wryly," joked Sidney Buckwold, a Liberal senator from Saskatchewan who had campaigned for Harradence. Although a Conservative, Diefenbaker was no fan of Clark.

Hostages embrace after release from embassy segregation

Any hostage trial 'flagrant violation' of all laws—Carter

Colonist wire services

President Carter Monday demanded the immediate release of all American hostages in Iran, saying any move to try the captives as spies would be a "flagrant violation" of the laws of man and God.

A blunt White House statement said the government of Iran is responsible for the "immediate and safe release" of all captives. It said the United States "has a right to expect that Iran will do so."

"Worldwide outrage at the detention of the hostages would be greatly heightened by any attempt to put these diplomatic personnel on trial," the White House said.

The statement condemned Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's threat to put captive American diplomats on trial if the United States fails to hand over deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

The Iranian Moslem leader said in television interviews Sunday he would try any Americans suspected of spying unless the cancer-striken shah was returned to Iran.

The White House issued the statement after Iran released three of the 62 hostages held captive in the U.S. embassy since Nov. 4. Ten additional black and female captives were freed soon after the statement was released.

In Tehran one of the 10 American hostages awaiting release from the occupied embassy said his Moslem captors had threatened to shoot some of the prisoners if he did not co-operate.

James Hughes, 24, one of six blacks to be released along with four women, was asked whether his captors told him if he would be treated better if he co-operated.

He replied: "I was blindfolded, tied up and made to sit on a table and the guy (one of his captors) hinted in a way if I didn't tell them what they wanted to know, he said, then maybe some of us would have to be shot.

"And I told them that was the risk of the job," Hughes said. "I have only been here a month so what could I tell him?"

The disclosure came during an emotional news conference where other hostages said two more women and a black captive were still being held by the militants, presumably because they

Mortgage plan defeat 'would mean election'

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister John Crosbie Monday dared Liberals and New Democrats to force an election on the Conservatives' mortgage interest and property tax credit plan.

"This is the time for the opposition to put up or shut up," he told a rowdy Commons as he introduced the scheme for debate. "This is a good issue to have another election on."

Crosbie later told reporters that another election is possible if the minority government can't get the plan through Parliament before the Christmas recess.

"We're not here for anarchy," he said. "If the House prevents us from passing one of the key pieces of legislation in our (May 22 election) campaign platform, then I'm sure the prime minister will know what action to take."

'Whistling in graveyard'

Crosbie's threat of an early election, however, failed to stop Liberal and NDP spokesmen from condemning the tax credit plan as unjust to most Canadians and a foolish use of tax money for a government hard pressed for funds.

Liberal finance critic Herb Gray said Prime Minister Clark is "whistling past the political graveyard of his government" with talk of an early election, and NDP finance critic Bob Rae dismissed Crosbie's comments as a bid for headlines.

Neither the Liberals nor the NDP has committed itself to voting against the plan on second reading, but party spokesmen expressed no fear of an election Monday and made it clear they are not prepared to meet Crosbie's request for approval in principle of the bill within a few days.

The Conservatives intend to ignore other bills before the Commons to press for passage of the tax credit plan before Dec. 21 so that home-owners will be able to claim the first benefits when they file their 1979 income tax forms next year.

Initially, the plan would provide maximum benefits of $375 a family. The maximum credit would rise to $1,500 a year for the 1982 tax year.

Crosbie estimated that 3.8 million of Canada's 9.4 million households would benefit from the plan, with the average benefit being $590 a year once it went into full force.

About 1.1 million homeowners would receive nothing because they pay no federal taxes, and 4.5 million others — mostly those living in apartments, and students — would also be excluded.

China accuses Viets of deadly incursion

PEKING (UPI) — China charged Tuesday that Vietnamese troops intruded "deep into Chinese territory" and said the incursion resulted in heavy loss of life. The Chinese foreign ministry sent the protest note Tuesday morning to the Vietnamese embassy in Peking, the official Xinhua news agency said.

The protest came in the same week that the two countries were expected to resume their drawn out peace talks in the Chinese capital. The talks have yielded no results.

The protest said Vietnamese forces shelled and machine-gunned a commune in Maguan county in China's Yunnan province.

Documents removed in caucus office raid

Three RCMP officers, armed with a search warrant, moved quietly into the Social Credit caucus offices in the legislative buildings last Friday, spent 90 minutes checking files, and left with an unspecified number of documents in their possession.

Police officials said the raid was a routine part of the investigation into the phoney letters-to-the-editor scandal.

For the past several weeks police have been questioning all persons who were, or could have been, involved in the "play-dirty" campaign tactics advocated by Socred research workers and distributed via tape recordings throughout the province.

The main thrust of the investigation is to ascertain whether the criminal code was broken by the authors of letters-to-the-editor or by those who advised the changing of signatures on such letters.

Key members of Premier Bennett's personal staff are expected to be questioned by the RCMP during the next few days, again as part of the routine investigation.

Socred caucus chairman Jack Kempf said Monday that he had not heard of the police check of caucus files until called by reporters Monday morning.

Ellen MacKay, still holding her position as a research worker in the caucus offices, said she couldn't understand why Kempf hadn't been informed, but speculated that the secretaries were "freaked out" by the police visit and had been told they were not to talk to anyone about events in the office complex.

Government to pare its CDC ownership

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced plans Monday to reduce its majority ownership of Canada Development Corp., while retaining effective control of the federal holding company established in 1971 to gain or keep Canadian ownership of various businesses.

Sinclair Stevens, president of the Treasury Board, also announced that the corporation may be used to buy up other federal companies the Conservative government wants to turn over to private ownership.

The Stevens explanation means that the government could retain at least indirect control, through its holding in the corporation, of the companies it slates for private ownership.

He said the government wants to reduce its present 66 per cent of CDC voting rights to less than 50 per cent in about six months, although the method has yet to be worked out.

The government is considering whether it can reduce its share eventually to 10 per cent, as originally set out in the 1971 legislation establishing the corporation.

That law also provides that the maximum outside shareholding in the corporation would be three per cent, leaving the government with the greatest single holding.

Stevens said at a news conference that the extent to which Ottawa reduces its CDC holding below 50 per

Yule tide floods in red

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, whose atheistic government officially frowns on religious holidays, is exporting Christmas cards for Western consumers in a controversial deal with a British company.

Although religious greeting cards are not normally sold in Moscow, the Soviet Union is printing Christmas cards with Christian and traditional British designs for export to the United Kingdom.

British critics have attacked the deal on commercial and religious grounds, but importer Michael Henderson, owner of European Greeting Card Ltd., defends his plans to buy 44 million Soviet-made Christmas cards this year.

"We are being accused of immorality and God knows what," Henderson said in an interview. "All the Soviets are doing for us is acting as a subcontractor."

The Soviet media have treated the matter lightly, suggesting that people afraid of "red" Christmas cards might also be suspicious of Britain's official red mailboxes.

The cards, all designed by British artists, include traditional coach-and-horses scenes, a madonna and child and Jesus in the manger with a donkey in the background and the three wise men, Henderson said.

Much of the criticism has come from Britain's Greeting Cards and Calendar Association, which contends the cards are being dumped on the British market at unfair prices from a country "that has historically denied Christ, denied the church and ruthlessly persecuted those who have accepted the existence of either."

Henderson, in Moscow on business, denied the dumping allegation and said that "by no means are we the cheapest cards in the U.K."

From his window a dead-end vista

The afternoon shadows spread out like spilled water over the small, barren lawn and past the remnants of a picket fence. The part of the fence that remained upright bore white freckled evidence that someone with a paint brush had once cared.

But not anymore. Not since the neighborhood had aged and absentee ownership had taken over.

The little house, like the lawn, looked anemic. The whole property was a monument to neglect.

It wasn't what Craig wanted for his wife and infant son. Not this two-room suite at the back and the dead-end view it offered—the skeleton of a forgotten car, the gate that hung limply from one rusted hinge.

First of all, Craig had wanted a place in the country where he felt that kid of his would have a chance to grow up with rosy cheeks and a clean mind. A silly dream, maybe, but it didn't matter now. It had dissipated like all the others.

Unemployment was one of those truths. God knows, Craig hadn't chosen unemployment as a way of life. But it was there, large and brutal and facing him much of the time, as it faced so many others in his age group.

He wished he had stayed in school longer. But would it really have helped? Didn't they say there were a lot of guys with degrees pounding the pavement in search of work?

He stood in front of the place the other day (he doesn't like to call it his place) watching the late afternoon shadows try without success to hide the misery.

He wondered what his kid's first Christmas would be like, what it would be like for his wife.

"I guess when you're as young as the kid is it doesn't really matter much," he said, trying to persuade himself that this was so.

There had been some temporary work lately. He'd maybe get something small for his wife and son. Some inexpensive Christmas decorations would take some of the sting out of the cramped living quarters.

Craig's story is by no means unique. There are others caught in the same web in this community—too many others.

At this time each year this newspaper's readers try to make life a little better for them on Christmas Day. They do it through contributions to the Colonist 500 Fund.

Their contributions have gone a long way to help a lot of Craigs. There is no reason to believe they won't continue to do so.

The NDP, which finished second in the riding, consoled itself with the fact that party support increased and it was "the No. 2 party in Newfoundland," according to Fonse Faour, the party's only MP from the province.

For the Liberals, the byelection results were a mixed blessing.

Although they won Burin-St. George's, their majority was smaller than when the last Liberal standard bearer, Don Jamieson, held the riding. Jamieson abandoned

Standing in the 282-seat Commons now is: Conservative 136, Liberal 114, NDP 27, Social Credit 5.

Each vote in the Commons will be more of a cliff-hanger than previously.

All it would take is for one Conservative or Socred MP to be absent and the vote would be tied, with Commons Speaker James Jerome, a Liberal, forced to cast the deciding ballot.

Other unknown factors in future votes include Paul Yewchuk, a disgruntled Conservative MP who has intentionally missed some votes already, and Arnold Peters, a New Democrat who has threatened to break party ranks to support the government for at least a few months more.

A major test of the government's power to control Parliament will occur during the debate following the introduction of its first budget Dec. 11.

Saskatchewan New Democrat Lorne Nystrom said the Socred support of the government could evaporate if nothing is done to lower interest rates.

cent will depend in part on whether the corporation buys any other crown companies from the government.

The CDC held assets valued at almost $4 billion at the end of last year, including control of resource companies such as Texasgulf Inc. and electronic firms such as AES Data Ltd.

Stevens said the CDC already controls 137 of some 400 businesses listed as crown companies, controlled by the federal government.

Reducing federal holdings on the CDC thus would constitute "a giant step ahead in getting crown corporations owned by the government to the private sector," Stevens said.

Shares of the corporation are traded on Canadian stock exchanges.

The minister was making the third so-called privatization announcement of the Conservative government since it was elected May 22. In September it named four companies and four subsidiaries it is considering putting into private hands. And in October it released a committee report on how to dispose much of Petro-Canada, the crown oil agency.

Stevens refused to say whether the government preferred to sell off its share in a public issue, distribute free shares to the public or other methods.

"We don't close our minds to any possibility," he said.

"Naturally we'd like the money," Stevens said, suggesting a figure between $100 million and $200 million for the government-held shares.

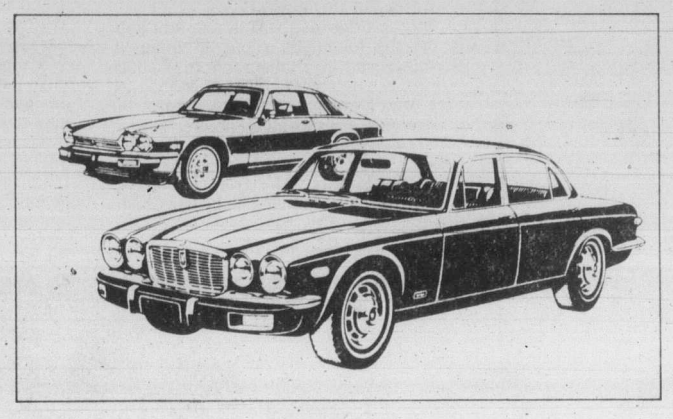

Stevens said the government decided to announce its plan, without knowing the method of carrying it out, to end rumors on stock exchanges.

He said he hoped the announcement would be welcomed by the stock market because he said potential shareholders have been hesitant about investing in government-owned enterprises.

Stevens said the corporation's financial performance this year should prove attractive to the private sector. In the first nine months, CDC earned record profits of $73.7 million and gross revenues increased to $1.4 billion from $902 million in the same period a year ago.

were considered "spies" and exempt from Khomeini's order to free blacks and women.

The captives — four women and six blacks — were paraded before reporters as a chartered Swissair DC-8 landed in Tehran to fly them to a U.S. military base in West Germany to join three other Americans released earlier.

The hostages told reporters out of 49 other Americans in captivity, two were women and one a black employee of the International Communication Agency, successor to the USIS. It was the first time additional women hostages were mentioned.

The disclosure that the women and a black would not be released was not disputed by the students. It was unclear whether the militants considered the two women and the black as spies and therefore not eligable for release under Khomeini's directive Saturday.

Joan Walsh, an embassy political officer, said the students were holding Katherine Koob, director of the Iran-America Society, a cultural centre, and Elizabeth Ann Swift, another political officer.

The black hostage was identified as Charles Jones. All three had arrived in Tehran recently, the hostages said.

The students refused to say when the hostages, being released under Khomeini's order of "Islamic mercy" for the "oppressed Blacks" and women, would be transferred to the airport for eventual departure from Tehran.

Privately, however, the students said the 10 would be released and allowed to leave Iran this morning.

The three freed hostages — a woman secretary and two black Marine sargeants — were said to be "in good health and strong spirits' resting in a military hospital at the Rhein-Main base near Frankfurt.

The Avis Advantage.

Our Reservation System.

The Avis Reservation System is a simple one, and in its simplicity, a successful one. It's made up of a highly efficient combination of people and machines.

Our reservations people are experienced professionals. They have the answers, suggestions and solutions to any rent a car problem you may have. They'll give you complete information on rates and prices, as well as information on special packages that can save you money. Or, if you have a special rental requirement, they can tell you what kind of vehicle is best suited for you. It's also their responsibility to make sure that, when you arrive, the vehicle you reserved is ready. No delays. No excuses.

And to back up our reservations people, we have our reservations computers. We have a nationwide computer link-up to keep every detail ready to serve you. By pressing a few buttons, we can quickly reserve you a full-size car in Timmins or a compact in Calgary. And we'll give you all the information you need quickly and accurately.

The only other machine that's involved is the telephone. Just pick it up and you can make a reservation from anywhere in Canada, toll-free, by dialing

Blunt to tell his story today

LONDON (UPI) — Sir Anthony Blunt, an adviser to two British monarchs who was unmasked as a Russian spy, said Monday he would tell his side of the story at a secret hideout today. The government called an emergency House of Commons debate on the scandal, which has stunned the nation.

Friends of the 72-year-old art historian said he was resigned about what had happened, but "cheerful" that things were about to be brought into the open.

The silver-haired, aristocratic Blunt, a former adviser to Queen Elizabeth II and her father, King George VI, on the royal family's priceless art collection, was exposed by Prime Minster Margaret Thatcher last week as the "fourth man" in the famed 1950s spy scandal involving diplomats Donald Maclean and Guy Burgess and journalist Kim Philby.

Thatcher disclosed that Blunt had been a key agent for the Soviet Union from the 1940s until he confessed to British Intelligence in 1964 in return for immunity from prosecution.

Politicians have denounced the agreement under which Blunt's activities were kept secret as a high-level coverup. The government announced there would be a full-scale debate in the House of Commons Wednesday.

Blunt went into hiding the day before Mrs. Thatcher's statement, but announced through his lawyer Monday that he would issue a 300-400 word statement then answer questions Tuesday under restricted conditions. The plan called for Blunt to meet with two unnamed journalists at an undisclosed location.

Attorney Michael Rubinstein submitted Blunt's statement to cabinet secretary Sir Robert Armstrong Monday "to ensure that Blunt's recall was correct as far as government records show."

The government checked the statement to ensure it contained nothing to "prejudice national security."

Rubinstein said Blunt "accepts with dignified resignation that what has happened had to happen."

Art dealer Brian Sewell said he had spoken with his friend Blunt Monday and found him "remarkably cheerful about the fact that things are about to come out into the open.

"His tone of voice was much better than any previous morning," Sewell said.

Blunt was stripped of his knighthood by the queen at the time of Mrs. Thatcher's announcement and a Cambridge university spokesman said Monday Blunt might also be stripped of his honorary fellowship of Trinity College — something that has never happened since the college was founded by King Henry VIII in 1546.

Blunt was teaching at Cambridge — and recruiting for the Russians — when he met Burgess, Maclean and Philby, all of whom later became Soviet agents and subsequently defected to Moscow.

Those are the breaks

When Sandra Kuiper of London, Ont., decided she needed a break from looking after her youngest son, who had pneumonia, and daughter Lisa, 10, who broke her right arm in tree fall, she decided to go rollerskating. And she fell, breaking her right arm. During the weekend, oldest son Jeffery, 12, left, went camping with the Boy Scouts. He broke his hand during some roughhousing.

Iran hostages puff way out of bind

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Three cigarettes a day and reading while bound to a chair were the sole diversions of American hostages held at the U.S. Embassy in a spartan existence.

Two women hostages, slated to be released early today, related how the male and female hostages in the diplomatic compound were separated in different sections of the embassy.

They told of an almost prison-camp existence in which a cigarette became a treat—something to look forward to. Since having a cigarette was a chance to get untied from the ropes binding them, non-smokers began to smoke.

"WE WOULD GET UP at 6:30 or seven in the morning," Elizabeth Montagne of Calumet City, Ill., said.

"There were about seven of us all together isolated with our keepers between us."

"We were first untied and then we would go down stairs and do our toilet and come back to be tied again to our chairs with our hands attached to the two arms of the chair.

"They let us read books. They would give us breakfast—Iranian bread, cheese and butter or jelly—and then we would have a cigarette.

"We were allowed three cigarettes a day."

"After breakfast and the cigarette we would be tied again and so go back to reading.

Montage said that the students watching them stopped blindfolding them after the first 10 days in captivity. The siege is now in its 17th day.

"AFTER BREAKFAST, THE cigarette and reading," she said, "We would sit and eagerly await lunch.

"We were hungry all the time and we had very substantial lunches and dinners. There was always lots to eat."

"We were given water whenever we wanted it, but we had to ask for it."

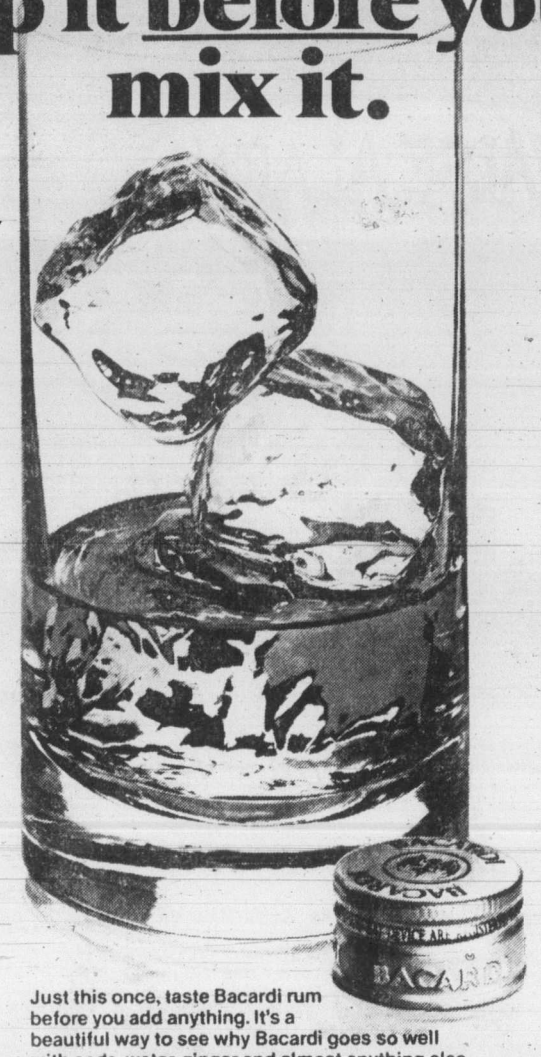

She said that since the smokers were untied first to light up a cigarette, non-smokers started asking for a cigarette.

Terry Tedford, of California, a non-smoker, was one of those. "That's right," she said of her starting to smoke so as to be able to stretch her hands.

Montage laughed at her friend's efforts with the weed.

"She would cough and spit and everything but still smoke the cigarette, while she had never smoked in her life," Montagne laughed.

Arabs' summit appears doomed

TUNIS, Tunisia (UPI) — Most Middle East political leaders flocked to Tunis Monday for an Arab summit conference that few seemed to want and most observers felt was doomed to failure before it even started.

The flags of 21 of the Arab League's 22 members waved in stiff breezes to greet the various presidents, sheikhs and emirs, plus the lone king — Hussein of Jordan.

Missing was Egypt, suspended from the League for signing a peace treaty with Israel.

The 10th Arab Summit, the first in Tunis, since the Arab League shifted headquarters from Cairo, was scheduled to open this morning in Tunis' Palace of Congress and last until Thursday.

Beyond that, nothing was certain.

The Arabs appeared divided, possibly beyond hope. Lebanon sought a summit devoted to solving the problems of its war-torn south. Iraq and Libya wanted to concentrate on the use of oil as a weapon against the industrialized west particularly the United States.

Other Arab League members felt continuing opposition to the Camp David accords and ways to bring pressure to bear on Egypt should top the agenda.

And over it all lurked the spectre of the U.S. Embassy takeover in Teheran — an issue the Arabs themselves were reluctant to discuss.

The Palestinian issue in Lebanon seemed to be a major stumbling block. Lebanon, perhaps the strongest of the proponents for the summit, wanted a unified Arab stand for solving the problems of the south and presented a working paper toward that end.

Romeo bit off more than she could chew

COLOGNE, West Germany (Reuter) — A woman bit off the tongue of a man who tried to kiss her in the street Monday—but he escaped with her handbag, leaving a 500-metre-long trail of blood.

Radio stations later broadcast messages warning the man he might bleed to death or suffer serious infection unless he received medical treatment.

Police said the man had not appeared at any city hospitals.

Let's see who likes secrets

AMONG THE MASS of resolutions debated at the convention of Ontario Liberals in Toronto over last weekend is a fragment of one relating to freedom of information which has particular appeal.

The resolution in question argued that the freedom-of-information legislation recently presented by the Clark government should provide for an independent arbitrator or commissioner, rather than a judge, to consider appeals when government has denied citizens access to certain information. But the nugget lay elsewhere. Judge or commissioner or arbitrator? What difference does a name make provided a competent person is given room to do the job?

Part of the resolution suggested that where government denied a request for information, the name of the civil servant making that decision be made public. Now that's a great idea. It would bring to the senior civil service at last some of the recognition it so richly deserves but has managed to avoid.

The Liberals have a function to fulfil in undertaking constructive criticism of government and offering sensible alternatives to government policies. Still, their criticism of this Tory bill has a certain cheekiness, given that they were government for the past 16 years and did nothing but drag their feet, even while paying lip service to the concept of more open government.

Surely no one believes that with the Tories in the driver's seat, it will be simple to extend freedom of access to the information now held secret by government. Just read the quotes from Ben Malkin's report from Ottawa on this page. Joe Clark and his colleagues can't yet express in plain English how they will open the locked filing cabinets, call up the computer memory banks of government, despite the prime minister's claim this legislation is his first priority. Come Liberals or Conservatives, the civil service mandarins remain in power and have a considerable influence on such decisions. It would be useful, as the Ontario Liberals have suggested, to at least know their names.

Progress, of sorts

WAS IT ONLY a generation ago that C.D. Howe asked scornfully: "what's a million or two?"

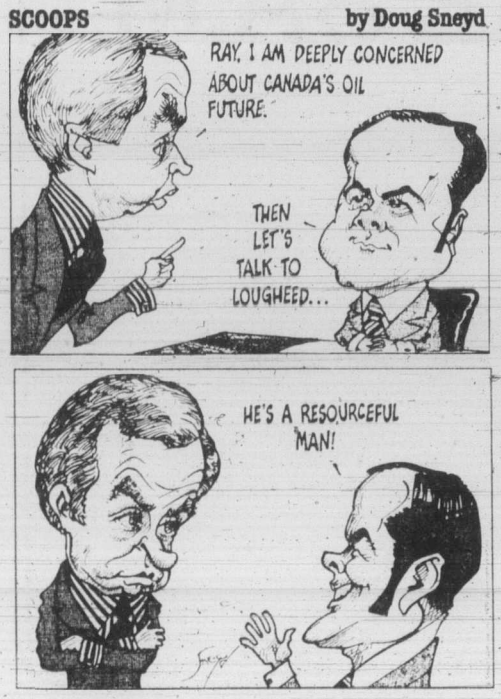

In more recent years we have had a "clerical error" which led the provincial government of the day to show a $100 million overrun in welfare spending.

Now the federal government says it is trying to find out how $800 million worth of fuel exports handled by Irving Oil Co. of Saint John failed to be reported to the customs branch of the national revenue department.

We may never match the scale of errors achieved by bigger nations like the United States, which this fall reported a $3 billion miscalculation related to currency supplies, but we have come a long way from the days of C.D. Howe who apparently was just a man ahead of his time.

What, indeed, is a million or two, these days?

COMMENT/BACKGROUND

A muddled report on a murky business

Ben Malkin

OTTAWA — Lawbreaking by the police if necessary, but not necessarily law breaking; that appears to be the position taken by Prime Minister Clark. At least, I think that's the position.

Or maybe it isn't. Last March, he told a Kitchener audience, "It would be essential for us to have a system in place whereby any breach of the law that might be necessary could be authorized by a responsible official of the cabinet." At a recent press conference in Ottawa, he reiterated that position.

Clear enough. The RCMP could break the law, provided the crime was authorized by a cabinet minister. At the same time, Clark said the matter would be reported to a special Commons committee, but it would sit in secret, and subsequently keep its lips sealed.

But Solicitor-General Allan Lawrence, replying to questions in the Commons, said Clark's position means that "under certain circumstances the law should be changed to permit the proper fulfilment of the duties and responsibilities we expect of law enforcement agencies in this country."

My interpretation of that suggests that the cabinet minister authorizing, say, an illegal break-in or a barn-burning, would have the power to do so under a new law which would give the government such sweeping powers.

On the other hand, Lawrence may mean that some single, existing law may be changed to make what is now illegal, legal. Mail opening under the authority of a warrant issued by a judge could be one such change — just as wire-tapping authority under the law was a change made several years ago.

The secret committee which will secretly hear secret reports on RCMP secret break-ins may or may not be set up. Clark offered his view on the committee in reply to a question in the Commons, but since he isn't always quite as lucid as one would wish, the issue remains somewhat obscure. He said:

"We are giving very serious consideration to the means by which a committee of that kind might be established. My colleague, the president of the privy council, is preparing a document proposing a variety of changes in committee organization in the House as part of a parliamentary reform package. One of the problems we have now . . . is that the government has referred almost too much work to committees and we intend to refer even more with the establishment of certain select committees.

"We do have certain difficulty in having to get agreement from the House to pass references quickly without debate, which can become too long once committees are established. We intend to reform the committee system of the House of Commons and we intend, in regard to the particular matter which the honorable member has raised, to give the most serious consideration to establishing a committee of that kind or some equivalent arrangement that will serve the same purposes."

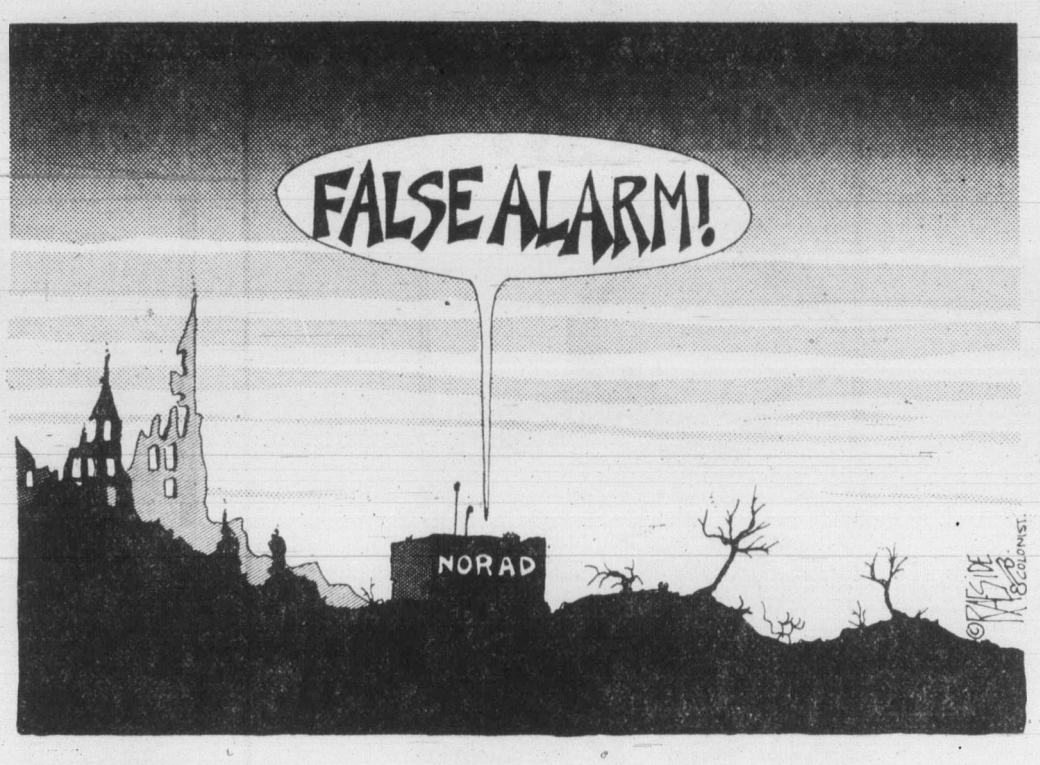

I used to think it was Clark's speaking style that sometimes made it hard for me to follow. He articulates at great speed, the words pouring out at a muzzle velocity of Mach 2. At the same time, he has a distracting habit of practising karate chops, sometimes with his left hand, sometimes with his right. He appears to be ambidextrous at the sport, like a switch hitter. The habit does make it hard for the eager listener to concentrate.

But even on paper, he isn't always clear. I gather, though, that the position is this:

If, as may or may not happen, a cabinet minister will receive the power to authorize illegal acts by the RCMP, a Commons committee may or may not be set up to receive reports on them. What the committee would do with these reports isn't known. It couldn't publish them, because then the illegal acts would no longer be secret, and that might not only damage national security but, much worse, hurt the reputations of the people authorizing and committing them. However, no doubt the government will think of what it can tell the committee it can do with its reports.

Then again, there may not be a committee. As Clark says, one of the problems is that the government has already given too much work to Commons committees to do. I would have hoped that a secret committee reviewing illegal police acts would have to meet, say, only once in five years; such acts can't, after all, be very frequent. But Clark may have other ideas.

At any rate, if we don't get a committee, we'll get "some equivalent arrangement that will serve the same purposes." Whatever that means.

PLO support is fashionable but its bloody policy remains

Ralph de Toledano

WASHINGTON — When Yasser Arafat was one of a group of young Palestinian terrorists operating in Egypt, one of his colleagues was accused of being an informer. Arafat drew his gun and blew the man's brains out. On investigation, it turned out that the dead man had been innocent, but Arafat never apologized for his brutal act. It made him a better man, he said.

This exploit, as well as the continual terrorist activities against women and children in Israel — and against those of his own people who do not agree with him — did not trouble Walter Fauntroy, Jesse Jackson, and other American black leaders who travelled to Beirut to do him honor. And it does not seem to trouble Life magazine which, in its current issue, paints a picture of him as a happy, loving man.

Yet Arafat and his Palestinian "Liberation" Organization, which levies tribute from the Saudis and the Libyans to the tune of some $700 million a year, has made the PLO the centre for world-wide terrorist activities, training and supplying arms to the Irish Provisional Army, to the deadly Baader-Meinhof group in Germany, and to Latin American guerrilla groups.

One team of PLO terrorists was even sent into the United States to blow up buildings and assassinate "enemies." It failed only due to the diligence of the FBI which, by "black bag" jobs, obtained PLO plans and a list of its agents.

The Life article presents a happy, charming and loving man dedicated to his people and resisting Israeli "outrages." Only glancing reference is made to the PLO's avowed and bloody determination to drive Israel into the sea. In fact, this is somehow transmogrified into a desire on Arafat's part to set up a secular state including Israel in which Arabs, Christians and Jews are equal.

One would have thought that the hard-nosed editors of Life would have seen this big wet kiss for Yasser Arafat as what it is. But nowadays it is fashionable to embrace the PLO and point a stern finger at the Israelis.

John Connally, who wants desperately to be president of the United States, is attempting to capitalize on what he sees as a change in American public opinion by proposing for the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, the Golan Heights and East Jerusalem just what Arafat and the PLO want.

Ironically, those who are selling the PLO line link it to America's need for Arab oil. But as even Carter administration officials openly concede, the Saudis and the other moderate Arab states are more fearful of the PLO than they are of Israel. They have seen how Arafat's Palestinians virtually destroyed Lebanon by joining in with Marxist and other left-wing elements to provoke and sustain a murderous civil war in what was once among the most advanced of Arab countries.

The Egyptians under Anwar Sadat would be very happy if the PLO disappeared. Arafat has threatened Sadat with assassination because he signed the Camp David agreements. Arafat, in so many words has said that he would cut off the hands of Sadat, Israeli Prime Minister Begin and President Carter — a tender sentiment lost on no one except the state department and the White House staff.

And what even those most critical of Israel know, here in Washington, is that Arafat and the PLO are not interested in a piece of Middle East real estate.

They are out for control of the entire Arab world, and with the Soviet Union behind them they feel that this is possible. Should they succeed, it would mean delivering the Mediterranean world to them and packing in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization alliance.

Given the national media's recent swing to the PLO, the efforts of politically powerful black leaders to drive a wedge between Israel and the Carter administration, and the appeasement tendencies of certain segments of the business community, the destruction of Israel would seem a lead pipe cinch.

The one obstacle is Israel itself. Its people were double-crossed by Franklin D. Roosevelt and by Dwight David Eisenhower. They are not going to accept the ambiguous assurances of the Carter administration — not when they remember the Holocaust and the price they paid in blood and tears to establish a state in which they exist without the sufrance of others. What is frightening is that the politicians in this country are playing with this issue as if it were a pork-barrel measure before Congress.

Perhaps what is needed is a president who will talk less about "human rights" and do something to protect them.

A cure for Pierre

Globe and Mail

The spas of New York have long been known for their curative powers. Numerous supplicants have made their painful way to the Night Clubs of Qualified Repute to sample the healing waters and rise up refreshed and whole. It should come as no shock to the members of the Liberal Party's British Columbia wing, therefore, to find that former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's lagging spirits have been magically restored by a visit to Club Ibis.

True, the B.C. wing had expected him to arrive at its weekend policy seminar. And true, he had begged off with a "dreadful cold". But the fact that he turned up that weekend at a New York disco holding hands with a glamorous woman named Linda should be seen in perspective. Stricken with what must have been at least the 12-hour flu, Mr. Trudeau dashed off to the Ibis solely to revive himself for future encounters with his B.C. supporters — one-third of whom, coincidentally, feel he has no business continuing as leader of the party.

Mr. Trudeau's only problem is that colds can recur when you're least expecting them. Uh, when was the B.C. wing planning to meet again?

Illegal drug trade just keeps growing

Sue Masterman
and Anton Koene
The London Observer

VIENNA — The inability of international agencies to bring the world's illegal drugs traffic under control was one of the main topics discussed recently by the 13-member International Narcotics Control Board in its new offices in Vienna.

It is not difficult to predict that the report it has drawn up for presentation at the United Nations in January will contain a repetition of the complaints of previous years.:

☆ That the "golden triangle" of Burma, Thailand and Laos remains the principal source of heroin;

☆ That cannabis traffic has reached vast dimensions and governments are reluctant to tackle the problem radically;

☆ That the use of cocaine is spreading outside the immediate circle to which it was originally confined by its high price;

☆ That the abuse of legally-prescribed medicines continues.

The INCB's task, according to its constitution, is to try to "limit the cultivation, production, manufacture and use of drugs to an adequate amount required for medical and scientific purposes, to ensure their availability for such purposes and to prevent the illicit cultivation, production and manufacture of, and illicit trafficking in and use of, drugs."

Where it has succeeded, the board claims, is in the control of the legal traffic in drugs for medical and scientific purposes. Some 90 per cent of the board's time is spent on this.

As a result, it claims to be aware of all legal international transactions in drugs, and of the control of their distribution to hospitals, pharmacies and doctors within a country. But its authority stops where the doctor picks up his pen.

There is no way of controlling the abuse of drugs which are legally obtained on prescription, as the board warned last year in its report on the increasing abuse of tranquilizers, amphetamines and sleeping pills.

When the board's predecessor took office 50 years ago, the only major drug problem was opium. Since then legislation has had to be changed to take in several hundred natural and synthetic drugs with all their derivatives.

Although cultivation of opium is increasing generally, there has been a shift during the last year from Southeast Asia to the Middle East. The UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control, now also housed in Vienna, has made a symbolic contribution from its $14 million budget to finance a project in Thailand, where 10 of the thousand or more opium farmers have been persuaded to switch to kidney beans and other vegetables in return for new wells and improvements in social amenities.

The production of coca leaf, mainly in South America, is also increasing, along with illicitly manufactured drugs, if the quantities seized can be taken as an indicator.

Against this tidal wave the UN organizations are almost powerless. Only 59 states are party to their most recent 1971 convention, and their sanctions are seriously limited.

If a country is not doing enough to counter illicit trading, the INCB has various responses. It can start a dialogue with the government concerned, it can carry out investigations and it can recommend measures to the government. This activity will never be officially publicized.

Only complete discretion, the INCB believes, can coax governments into co-operating in schemes which are often against the economic interests of a substantial section of their population.

If talking does not help, then the screen of confidentiality can be lifted: the government concerned can be pilloried for failing to discourage the drug trade, although this measure has never been used by the board.

Neither has the final measure, a recommendation to the Security Council of an embargo which could halt the flow of drugs for medical and scientific purposes to the errant country.

When the board's report is published in January, the INCB president, Professor Paul Reuter, will repeat a previous warning that the world-wide outlook on drug abuse is bleak and that the problem is out-distancing international attempts at control.

Today in History

An orphan, the boy spent his time reading old manuscripts and, at the age of 12, composing poems which he claimed were the work of a 15th-century monk named Rowley. The poems were accepted by Horace Walpole, among others, as genuine.

In 1770 Chatterton went to London, where he found literary success and financial disaster. He committed suicide by arsenic poisoning three months before his 18th birthday.

1841 — Sir Wilfrid Laurier was born.

1903 — The city of Moose Jaw, Sask., was incorporated.

By DOUG SMALL

Colonist FP News Service

TORONTO — For all the formal discussion and policy plotting at political gatherings, it's the incidental asides and incidents that provide the truest measure of a party and its people.

One thus looks back on the latest Liberal conclave in this, the city of folding corporate tents, to the corridor and cocktail talk, to the unexpected happenings, for a handle on a party whose power has silently slipped away.

One hears and sees, in the swell of tweed-and-suede clad natty Grits, conflicting things. On one front, there are bored murmurs that Pierre Trudeau really should let people know whether he plans to stay, or to go. Until he gives some sign of the course he plans to follow (and there are many who suggest they don't really care which he picks), there are those who make clear they'll continue to treat their time in opposition as a holiday, popping into policy conferences for after-hours fun and responding with eye-rolling embarrassment to the likes of Ontario MP Robert Daudlin, who attempted to whip up a little old-fashioned party spirit by making all assembled stand up and shout: "I'm a Liberal, and I'm proud. I have a leader. He speaks for Canada. He speaks for me, and I'm proud."

After that little display, this comment from one in the ultrasuede set: "Really, you'd think we were New Democrats."

"It's enough to make one cringe."

At Liberal affairs, appearances by John Turner and Pierre Trudeau are accompanied by volleys of Brownie camera popgun bursts and wild cries from roaming packs of autograph hounds. The two are not so much leaders as party stars, and their movements are watched more for gossip than political value. Hence the interest in a chance meeting by the two ("What did they say? What did they do?" "They shook hands." "Really.") and the lust for personal details about either.

However, while the two go about titilating the young and the sleek, less sophisticated Liberals follow a star of another sort — earthy old Eugene Whelan, the former agriculture minister.

We chanced upon him in a convention sideroom, where he was going on like this:

On John Diefenbaker: "He used to criticize Otto Lang and I for doing a lot of travelling. But that last trip he took . . . what a way to go—$500,000. And the taxpayers paid."

On his old foe Beryl Plumptre, former head of the Food Prices Review Board, now reeve of Rockcliffe, an Ottawa suburb: "She's taken a step back. I was a reeve 20 years ago."

On Finance Minister John Crosbie, a rich Newfoundlander: "He didn't associate with Newfoundland fishermen's kids. He went to a private school in Toronto. That's where he got his high interest rate philosophy."

On Joe Clark: "There's not going to be much of a Christmas in Alberta this year. They sent their turkey to Ottawa."

Incidentally, we were pleased to see Trudeau pick up the tab for that weekend he spent getting over the flu in the discos of New York. (Remember? He slipped away for the cure after bowing out of a party policy meeting in B.C.) The bill? A tidy $1 million, the amount he told Liberals he wants the party to spend rebuilding in the alienated West.

•

Liberals have this fear that they'll eventually be reduced to a Quebec rump. The party is as strong in that province as it is weak elsewhere. Hence the nervous titter that fell over the Ontario crowd when a bilingual convention hall banner reading "The Liberal party of Canada. Le Parti Liberal du Canada" came untacked on one corner and dropped, covering the English and making the French just that much more prominent.

Of course not.

Getting 1,500 delegates out of a convention hotel can create no end of confusion. To ease the crush, President MacLeod urged conference participates to "check out in a staggered fashion."

Then, casting an eye out over the crowd before him, bleery from parties of the night before, he added: "For some it will be easier than others."

Holocaust needed to treasure life?

Having recently attended a Pro-Life seminar with Dr. Koop (Nov. 9 and 10), I was appalled to learn what is happening in our country concerning abortion, infanticide and euthanasia.

We have virtually abortion-on-demand now and thousands of babies are killed because it is sanctioned by the law.

Can we as citizens of a Christian country stand by silently and by being apathetic watch these unborn children being killed by the abortionists?

Today choices are being made that undermine human rights at their most basic level.

Speak up for those who cannot defend themselves! Do we need another holocaust to remind us how precious human life really is?

Women's rights controlled by men

I would like to respond to John Clarkson's letter re abortion in the Nov. 10 Colonist.

The real issue of abortion is a woman's right to control her own life. The laws dealing with abortion are written and enforced largely by men, but tell women what they may do with their lives.

How presumptuous of you to decide that the word health in the Criminal Code on abortion speaks about the woman's physical health. The World Health Organization's definition of health, accepted by the Canadian Medical Association, is: "Health is a complete state of physical, mental and social well-being, and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity."

I am convinced you would be unable to substantiate, with empirical evidence, your statements that (a) rarely, if ever, is an abortion medically necessary; and (b) most of the abortions in Canada are performed not for medical reasons, but for socio-economic reasons.

My concern is that you reflect the opinions of an obstreperous minority, hell-bent on arbitarily tampering with the human rights of the women of this country.

Big yawn for Bluepeace protest

Outgoing mayor Young wonders where the environmentalists were over the issue of oil tankers on our West Coast.

Three years ago, a group of Victoria citizens gathered in Newcombe Theatre because of their deep concern over the tanker issue. From that meeting, a group called Bluepeace emerged and their sole objective was to press for safe transportation of oil, research into "clean-up" methods and last, but not least, the protection of our beautiful coast.

As most readers will know, David Anderson has been an eloquent spokesman for this issue but it is obvious, that governments, provincial and federal, have avoided the issue until the last possible minute.

Since the inception of the Alyeska pipeline in 1969 it was obvious that the oil would be moved south to the U.S. and the route chosen would be of vital importance to B.C. Soon after Bluepeace's formation, the Kitimat oil consortium announced its proposal to build a superport at Kitimat.

There was a storm of protest from environmental groups which I feel was instrumental in the establishment of the Thompson Enquiry. Environmentalists wanted the Canadian government to look at all oil transportation issues but they chose to look at the very narrow topic of one port.

At that time Bluepeace wrote to the four core municipal councils and in effect, begged them to become involved and informed. We received a big yawn from all councils except Saanich which sent a submission to the enquiry.

I might also add, in all this time there was not one word from the business community where livelihoods would be very much affected by any tanker accident in the Juan de Fuca strait.

How can a handful of concerned persons, do battle with an oil company like Northern Tier which has spent $40 million over the last three years promoting its proposal? All of the above information has been available for three to four years and we, in Bluepeace, would have been delighted to have heard from Mayor Young, Ald. Glazier, anyone in the provincial government or Allan McKinnon. If we had spoken out decisively three years ago, we just might have had some influence on the American decision!

Computer blackout

Last February I had to go to Victoria General emergency on two occasions. I wasn't able to pay the $4 at that time, so I went down to the office to pay and was told it hadn't come through on the computer yet and to wait until it came through the mail.

Here it is November and I have still not been able to pay this bill. I always understood that computers were to save time. It sure hasn't in my case. How come?

VANCOUVER — Western Canadians view Liberals somewhat as anthropologists view the three-toed wombat.

When anthropologists are struck with the Friday afternoon blahs, despondent at never finding another King Tut or dinosaur bone, they amuse themselves by getting out the gin and watching the fat, myopic wombat bump into walls.

Liberals serve basically the same purpose for a Western Canadian bored with tar sands, the Crow's Nest Pass freight rate and postcards of Hawaii. When struck with ennui, one can always observe the feeble waddlings of the Liberals and get a giggle.

The Liberals, in the section of Canada that is growing fastest and growing richest, by diligence and hard work have managed to emulate the famous small Arctic bird that flies faster and faster in decreasing concentric circles until it disappears up one of its own orifices.

After 11 years of displaying their expertise on, and deep interest in, Western Canada the Trudeaucrats have succeeded in the same feat of acrobatic ledgerdemain.

By dutifully appointing party hacks to the Senate, weak men to the cabinet and restraining their appeal to the cocktail party crowd, the Ottawa Liberals succeeded in alienating the general public of the West.

British Columbia hates the Liberals because in 11 years the Trudeucrats showed no interest in doing anything to help prevent those lumbering of oafs of oil tankers from fumbling their way down the fjord-filled B.C. coast on the way from Alaska.

Saskatchewan and Manitoba hate the Liberals because in 11 years the Trudeaucrats made no progress in improving the grain-handling and railways mess so that as a result the Prairies now grow only half the wheat they could.

What is so hilarious now is that the political version of the wombat, having alienated the public, has set out to alienate its own.

At the recent meeting of a ginger group of younger and more impatient members of the party in Winnipeg, B.C. had most of its remaining Liberal shakers present.

Art Phillips, the Lone Ranger from Vancouver-Centre was there. So was B.C. party president Shirley McLoughlin. So was Gordon Gibson, the Trudeau friend who was the last B.C. leader, UBC vice-president Chuck Connaghan, Sean Sullivan, Russ Brink, the whole crew.

In all, the B.C. contingent was probably the most enthusiastic about reviving the party and setting off in new directions after the debacle of May 22.

We, the B.C. Liberals told the Winnipeg gathering, plan to begin our own revival at a meeting in suburban Vancouver in mid-November and whosoever from across Canada can make it is welcome.

This, of course, was the celebrated revival meeting that a flu-struck Pierre Trudeau could not make but instead recuperated in New York with one lady on Saturday and showed up at midnight at Club Ibis with the now-famous lady known as Linda.

The political voyeurs of the nation find it all very entertaining, since Trudeau has long since become an ikon and his social affairs are always a divertissement which allows a grateful public not to have to think of Joe Clark for a short respite.

The only people who don't find it funny are the B.C. Liberals. Now that the party brains in Ottawa have succeeded in alienating the B.C. voters, they've started to.

Especially not amused is Phillips. He knows he's in the Commons only by a bit of a fluke anyway. Conservative Pat Carney, after waiting 11 months for an election date, resigned her nomination and by the time she was persuaded to reenter the race the campaign was well underway and her workers were scattered.

Even at that, she nipped Phillips by two votes on May 22 and lost by just 85 on the recount. Phillips knows a Carney campaigning full-time with the backing of the Tory government behind her will be even more formidable.

To add to his troubles, the Clark people have pulled a clever ploy. Carney was offered her pick of a job in Ottawa by Jean Pigott, the Godmother of appointments.

Instead, Carney will run Pacifics '80, a top-level conference on Canada's future in the Pacific Rim. It will be in Vancouver Feb. 8-9, featuring a dozen countries, is under the "personal direction" of Joe Clark and will give Carney tremendous personal publicity.

She left this weekend for the Phillipines, part of the high-profile, and poor Art Phillips knows it will take more than 85 votes to compensate for the lovely Linda.

Police harassment charges unfounded

I feel I must comment on the statements made by Shirley Wakeham, accusing the Victoria city police of brutality and harassment of the street children.

I feel one cannot accept these statements under the guise of fair comment. At no time does she come up with one iota of proof. She maligns the entire police force with her unjust and unfounded accusations.

To you, Shirley Wakeham, I respectfully suggest that you get facts, and in writing, and not listen to hearsay from people who are uptight because they are expected to behave like law abiding citizens, regardless of their age. Your statements, are somewhat biased and meant only to impress those who are anti-law and order.

Advantages of Microwave Cooking

Why is the microwave oven so popular? Because it promises to make cooking easier, faster, cleaner and better. And it delivers on its promises.

— It reduces the time needed to cook most foods to between ⅓ to ½ the time required by conventional ovens.
— It eliminates dirty pots and pans, since most foods can be cooked in their serving dishes or on dinner plates. Spills and splatters in the oven wipe up with a damp cloth. Since the oven walls do not heat up, foods cannot bake or burn on.
— It speeds defrosting time of frozen foods. Meats, poultry or casseroles that require hours to thaw at room temperature can be defrosted literally in minutes in a microwave oven.
— It makes leftovers taste fresher because it heats them rapidly without drying them out.
— It saves energy because cooking time is faster, no preheating is necessary, and the energy is absorbed by the food rather that dispersed into the air or absorbed by oven walls. Both the oven and the kitchen stay cool.

Mayor mystified by convention centre ceremony

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist reporter

Victoria Mayor Michael Young believes the federal government has approved a $2.5 million grant for the proposed Victoria convention centre, but he isn't sure.

In fact, he's rather mystified by the latest chapter in the convention centre saga.

And Young's reaction to the secrecy which surrounds the centre was mild compared with that of Ald. Robin Blencoe.

Both the mayor and Blencoe feel such a ceremony is rather premature, considering city council has not yet seen any final plans for the centre.

Young said in an interview Monday the only reason for the ceremony he could think of was an impending announcement by the federal government of a grant to help build the centre.

He said this speculation was given substance by the fact that Ottawa approved a grant last week for the Vancouver convention centre.

On that project, Ottawa agreed to match the provincial contribution to a maximum of $10 million, but not exceeding one-third of the project's total cost.

"How can the federal government approve a grant for Vancouver and not do the same thing for little old Victoria?" he said.

Asked why he wasn't informed of Ottawa's decision to contribute to the project if, in fact, that's the case, the mayor said: "Maybe they think I'm a blabbermouth."

Young said there had been no final plans for the project as late as last Friday. At a meeting that day of the Provincial Capital Commission, of which Young is a member, the project was discussed in very general terms, he said.

He confirmed that previous plans for substantial commercial space had been deleted from the project. To qualify for federal assistance, the actual convention facilities had to be upgraded and enlarged, and the only way to do that, Young said, was to delete the proposed food market.

He said there would be ancillary facilities such as a restaurant, bar and and laundromat. He also said removal of the commercial content from the project would "actually improve the convention facility."

As for the sod-turning ceremony, the mayor said it could "only be ceremonial in nature," considering the absence of any plans for the city to look at.

Blencoe was more outspoken than the mayor in his criticism of the ceremony.

"We have no plans, no designs, no drawings. We are not aware that the funding has been settled and here, we are told there'll be a ground-breaking ceremony," he said.

"The meetings (of the capital commission) are held behind closed doors, and we aren't told a thing. I'm tired of this kind of decision-making."

Blencoe stressed he was in favor of a convention centre, but didn't like the way the city was being excluded from the planning process.

The city, Blencoe said, had quite a stake in the proposal. Not only had city council agreed to build a parkade at the site at a cost of $1.5 million, but the city was also committed to underwrite half the operating deficit for the proposed centre, to a maximum of $200,000 a year.

"But how can we endorse a project we know nothing about?" he asked.

So far, the provincial government has agreed to pay $2.5 million toward construction of the centre, seeking a matching grant from the federal government.

The proposed centre is to serve blass B conventions of up to 1,500 delegates.

Globe Theatre revival joins Maltwood lineup

Saanich council decided Monday to hold a public meeting Saturday, Dec. 15, in The Thatch at Royal Oak to determine future use of the building and 7.7 acres of land willed to the University of Victoria with the Maltwood collection of fine art in 1964.

The municipality and the university have agreed to a purchase price of $375,000 for the building and the property.

Council cleared the way for the final paper work to be completed when it gave a land acquisition and mortgage bylaw final approval Monday.

The 11 submissions aldermen will consider at the December meeting include a proposal by the Lord Chamberlain's Players society, a Victoria group, for reconstruction of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre on the property, and converting The Thatch for theatrical use.

The society plans to reconstruct an entire Elizabethan playhouse, the world's first operating reconstruction of the Globe, built on the south bank of the Thames River at London, England in 1599 by Shakespeare's acting company.

The 16-sided building, 87 feet wide (plus nine feet for the staircase), and 45-feet-high to a thatched roof would be host to an annual Elizabethan festival.

The Thatch would become an integral part of the Shakespearean festival.

There are three proposals for restaurants and two submissions for neighborhood pubs.

Other ideas range from using the property for a youth hostel to a senior citizens housing building.

In other business, council:

● Gave final reading to a bylaw rezoning property on Glasgow Avenue for medium-density apartments. Council had earlier ordered development proposals frozen until a study of the area.

● Approval design of the first building to be built in the new Royal Oak industrial zone. Gray Beverage Co. will move into its new 100,000-square-foot building next spring.

● Agreed to a request by the Royal Oak Advisory Design Panel that the quorum be increased from three to five members. The seven-member panel, created two months ago by Mayor Mel Couvelier, will review all building applications in the zone.

● Couvelier paid tribute to the achievements of retiring aldermen Fred Severson and David Paterson. Severson is stepping down after eight years and Paterson has served four years.

Fall claims another life at Lodge

In the second incident of its kind in less than two weeks, a resident at the James Bay Lodge, 336 Simcoe, has died apparently as the result of a fall out of a window.

Ada Lock, an 88-year-old resident at the lodge since Aug. 21, 1973, was found dead shortly before 3:30 a.m. Monday, about 55 metres below the open window of her room.

Victoria police said there was no indication of foul play. Coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre has ordered an autopsy.

On Nov. 7, the body of 90-year-old John Pascoe was found about 5:30 a.m., about 65 metres below his third-floor window, which was also found open.

St. Jorre is expected to hold inquests in the two incidents as well as into the deaths of three traffic accident victims.

The coroner has set Dec. 5 as the date for an inquest to open in the death of 53-year-old Gerald Thomas Littlejohn. He died in a three-vehicle mishap which involved an empty bus Oct. 26 on the Island Highway at Spencer Road. The inquest is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in the small claims courtroom of the Law Courts.

No dates have been set yet for inquests in a Nov. 16 car-pedestrian mishap in the 1600-block Richmond which claimed the life of 86-year-old Bruce Cooper or the Sunday night crash on Sooke Road near Allandale which took the life of 21-year-old Diana Susan Derkson of 2664 Blackwood.

Colwood RCMP said the young woman was employed at the King John Inn, and was heading home from work when her eastbound compact car collided with a westbound sedan driven by Harold Doucette of Happy Valley Road.

Election of trustees all very interesting

By PAUL De GROOT
Colonist reporter

Carol Pickup said it is "very interesting."

Travor Calkins said it is "interesting."

What the chairman of the Greater Victoria school board and the president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association find so interesting is the result of the election of trustees Saturday, and they used an equivocal word to describe the result because the board itself is likely to be equivocal.

Two new faces in particular, those of first-time trustee Michael Hutchison and veteran trustee Lavinia Greenwood, are difficult to attach labels too, a relatively new idea for a board which, over the last three years at least, has split relatively neatly into a liberal or progressive or educational-responsibility camp (labels are cheap so we use lots of them), and a conservative or fiscally-responsible camp.

The 1980 school year promises to bring labels to ruin.

Even though her protege, Joan Dayton, failed to make it on the board, Mrs. Pickup said Monday she is "not unhappy" with the result of the election.

"I think Michael Hutchison has a lot to offer to the board. He does not appear to have a conservative approach to education, and seemed during the campaign to listen to all-view points."

Mrs. Greenwood is "a very investigative trustee who is not content to go along with the status quo, and it will be interesting to see what role she takes on."

Also new on the board is accountant Terrence Hackett, expected to join the conservative camp like his mentor, retiring trustee Glyn Williams, also an accountant.

The three trustees who will not be on the board again in 1980 included Williams and Susan Brice, both considered to be part of the conservative side of the board. The other trustee was Mary Breer, whose special concern for improving services to children with learning disabilities usually put her in the liberal camp.

Those three will be replaced by Hackett, a conservative, Greenwood, expected to lean to the liberal side, and Hutchison, expected to lean to the right.

But as recent events in 1979 indicate, the labels are often meaningless when applied to key votes. Strong pressure from the school district administration to add more teachers to the staff got equally strong support during discussion of the provisional budget from Mrs. Pickup and John Young, the most dependably liberal trustees on the board, but little support from trustee Win Mott and Martin Levin, also considered to be part of the liberal camp.

When the requests for additional teachers were voted down, Mrs. Pickup and Young said privately that they would get them at final budget time, in February.

Inaugural meetings on Dec. 3

All area municipal councils will hold their 1980 inaugural meetings on Monday, Dec. 3, as required under the Municipal Act.

Various times have been set, however, with Victoria meeting at 1 p.m., Saanich and Esquimalt at 7:30 p.m. and Oak Bay at 8 p.m.

North Saanich's and Sidney's will be at 7:30 p.m. Central Saanich has chosen 8:30 p.m.

The Capital Region Board will hold its inaugural meeting at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 5, when a new chairman will be chosen to replace Victoria Ald. Murray Glazier, defeated in his bid for the mayoralty.

Municipalities which appoint directors and want input in the selection of the new chairman will have to name their 1980 representatives on Dec. 3.

PIPING PLAYS TRICKS

Motorists on Douglas Street were attracted to this truck Monday night like moths to a light. Which, in a sense, is just what the truck was—a mobile display of eerie, flashing colors as the lights of the city danced in and out of the cargo of plastic sewer pipes. The effect was surprising even to truck driver Dave Stevens when he stopped here at Douglas and Finlayson.

Dressed in their distinctive costumes and carrying the tools of their trade, they walked endlessly from town to town and slept where they could, often in the barns of friendly farmers.

If it sounds like something out of the Middle Ages, it is.

However, it had a lasting quality to it—reaching right into the present century and embracing men like Heinz Linge.

AND BECAUSE it did, Linge stands almost alone today, a member of a vanishing breed in an era of vanishing skills.

He is a living symbol of what is really meant by the word journeyman.

His apprenticeship as a carpenter was served in Germany, exactly as it had been served by others nearly five centuries ago—three years of wandering the country on foot, learning the ways and skills of the various regions, abiding by rigid rules, becoming resourceful by necessity, and knowing in the end he would be judged on competence, knowledge and character before earning himself the title of master carpenter.

"I THINK we should come back to that sort of thing," Linge said in an interview Monday night before stepping into a meeting room to receive his pin as a 25-year member of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters in Canada.

"But actually, I think in a way we are doing it with the interchange of young people. It may not be the same thing, but there are a lot of students involved in exchanges between different countries and regions."

While he is well settled now as a skilled carpenter with the display department of the Sears department store, there was a bit of the real journeyman about Linge after he came to Canada in 1953. He worked in Alberta, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan before moving to Victoria in 1968.

THERE WAS a lot of history behind the black costume (complete with big-brimmed hat) that he wore to the meeting of the Victoria carpenter's union local Monday.

Briefly, it is this:

Heinz Linge

. . . black costume, wide-brimmed hat, and a new pin

IN 1500, the master of the Carpenters Guild in Hamburg brooded over the fact that too many men were specializing in single forms of the craft. A man who was a good shipbuilder might know little about building a roof. The expert roof builder wouldn't have much interest in interior carpentry.

So the master carpenter came up with an apprenticeship scheme which exists to this day, although it has dwindled to the point where there is reportedly only a handful of journeymen following it in Germany and Switzerland.

IT MEANT (and still did during the apprenticeship of Heinz Linge) that the journeyman wanders the country for a month observing the regional ways of carpentry, works for a master carpenter for three months, then repeats the whole procedure again and again until his three years are up.

His costume (he is allowed only one change of clothes) must be worn on all occasions—whether he's in a farmfield or ballroom.

While he is lodged and fed free, he is allowed very little money during the apprenticeship (this is supposed to add to his resourcefulness), his good and bad points are recorded by his employer of the moment, and he is not allowed to come within 35 miles of his home town during the three years.

BEFORE SETTING out on the long journey he takes an oath to adhere to all these regulations. To break the oath is to get kicked out of the guild for life.

The 52-year-old Heinz Linge doesn't have to worry about that sort of thing these days. But he's glad it all became part of his life. He feels it was the most broadening experience he ever had and that it taught him skills he could never have learned in any other way.

WHEN HE SEES the way things are going today, it saddens him a little.

"I think we have lost a lot of the skill that was known by the older craftsman," he says.

But he isn't inclined to blame the workers, since the demands of today don't allow for some of the old ways.

"We've become the victims of the profit motive," he says.

Canada's 'going down chaos road'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Federal and provincial politicians are leading Canada down the road to social and economical chaos, president Jim Kinnaird of the B.C. Federation of Labor said Monday.

Kinnaird opened the annual federation convention by lashing out at companies for making "obscene profits" because their only goal was "to suck as much money as they can out of the economy before the bottom falls out."

He charged it was all part of an "organized campaign against the whole labor movement, co-ordinated by the federal, provincial and municipal governments and their business allies."

Kinnaird, ending his first year as president of the 260,000-member federation, said the labor movement had to unite as never before to survive the attacks.

Internal problems regarding jurisdiction between unions had to be resolved inside the movement to maintain unity, he said, and the radical left wing had to be resisted by labor.

He said external problems facing labor included unemployment, unemployment insurance cutbacks, high interest rates, and overpriced housing.

Volcano evaporates

WHISTLER (CP) — Talk of a volcano at Whistler Mountain, north of Vancouver, has gone up in smoke.

Smoke and fumes were spotted Thursday rising from a peak in Garibaldi Park by a pilot flying over the area.

However, Dr. Jack Souther, a volcano expert for the federal government, said Sunday he found no evidence of volcanic ash or smoke around the area. He did discover slash-burning about 16 kilometres away.

He said the pilot probably made a navigational error in reporting the point where he saw the smoke.

Two broadcasters guilty of contempt

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two broadcasters were found guilty Monday of criminal contempt in comments about one of the accused in a B.C. Supreme Court drug trial.

Chief Justice Allan McEachern reserved decision to Thursday on the sentencing of open-line host Gary Bannerman of radio station CKNW and news reporter Russ Froese of B.C. Television Ltd.

The offending remarks, which the court decided were calculated to prejudice a criminal proceeding, were made in October, 1978. They concerned the criminal background of William (Fats) Robertson, who was on trial for conspiring to traffic in cocaine.

TOYOTA TERCEL. The first perfect small car?

Total Economy Project.

Toyota will be the first to tell you that there's no such thing as perfect, that they will never stop trying to perfect, to improve the automobile. The Toyota Tercel has front-wheel drive. The Chevette doesn't. Tercel has a longitudinal engine. Rabbit doesn't. Tercel has 4-wheel independent suspension. Citation doesn't. Tercel has more interior space than a Honda Civic. And Tercel costs less than an Omni.

The automatic Tercel is the lowest priced front wheel drive automatic sold in Canada. In fact, the lowest priced Tercel costs less than the lowest priced Honda.

Front Wheel Drive.

Toyota's Tercel combines front wheel drive with a new 1.5 litre SOHC longitudinal engine, 4-wheel independent suspension, direct transmission linkage, 2500mm (98") wheelbase and special suspension geometry.

The Tercel has been designed to reduce to a minimum the tendency of some front wheel drive vehicles to veer with acceleration or deceleration (known as torque steering), jerking and pitching when accelerating, (known as snatching), mushy gear shifting, difficulty in engine servicing and to correct the inappropriate position of pedals and steering column.

Longitudinal Engine.

In designing Tercel with a fore-and-aft (longitudinal) engine, Toyota has created a powerplant which is exceptionally easy to service. This ease of access will help keep the cost of operating your new Tercel to a minimum.

And yet, Tercel's engine takes up no more room than a transverse. This remarkable system places the differential underneath the engine rather than behind it.

4-Wheel Independent Suspension.

For years racing cars have used 4-wheel independent suspension. Naturally, Tercel has 4-wheel independent suspension with MacPherson front strut and pure trailing rear arms. There are stabilizer bars both front and rear. To improve steering stability and brake efficiency, to reduce to a minimum snatching and torque steering, Toyota has ingeniously employed slightly positive – offset kingpin geometry on Tercel. Thus shock transmitted from the road to the steering wheel is efficiently supressed and steering balance is maintained.

The Lineup.

The four Tercel models (Sedan, Sedan TG, Liftback and SR5 Liftback) require very little by way of options.

The Economy Story.

Urban	Hi-way	Comparative Rating
8.6	5.8	6.9*
Estimates

6.9 litres/100 km equals approximately 41 m.p.g. 1 gallon equals 4.5 litres.

Numbers based on laboratory tests using approved Transport Canada test methods. Actual consumption will vary. Urban winter consumption will be significantly greater. Consult the 1980 Transport Canada Guide for details.

Socreds 'drifting' with letter affair

Canadian Press

The government is so involved in the dirty tricks affair that it is allowing the province to drift, Opposition Leader David Barrett said Monday.

"The government is not governing," Barrett said. "No decisions are being made and nobody in government knows what is going on."

Barrett refused to comment directly about recent remarks made by Municipal Affairs Minister William Vander Zalm and Environment Minister Rafe Mair critical of the government's handling of the so-called Lettergate caper.

"They're all running in different directions and snickering behind each other's backs over what's going on and making comments to each other," he said.

"The government has been reduced to gossiping about each other rather than getting on with the very serious problems faced by the province."

Barrett said he is not interested in gossip and believes there has been a coverup.

What Mair and Vander Zalm are complaining about, he said, is that the coverup was handled badly.

The affair stems from the disclosure that Social Credit party followers were urged to play dirty in a tape recording prepared in anticipation of the last provincial election and counselled to sign fake names to letters to newspaper editors.

Barrett said an investigation of NDP files did not find any evidence of tampering.

Profit flood provides water bonus

Christmas came early for about 9,000 customers of the Greater Victoria Water District who opened their recent bills to find a rebate.

About $10,000 was turned back to users in the western communities, according to John Heggie, secretary-treasurer of the water district, by dropping the bimonthly service charge of about $5.

The reason for the rebate, according to Heggie, was increased revenues in water sales during the dry spring and summer.

At budget time the wholesale rate was set at 16.5 cents per 1,000 gallons but that figure was reduced to 13 cents at the October board meeting because of the unexpected revenues.

Users in the western communities were the only ones in the Capital Region to get a direct rebate as they purchase their water individually from the board.

The core and peninsula municipalities, Heggie said, were using their share of the rebate for their water distribution systems.

A similar rebate was offered in the last billing period of 1978, Heggie said.

ICBC to appeal over back pay

Canadian Press

The Insurance Corp. of B.C. is going to appeal an order to reinstate a retired employee and give him $10,000 back pay.

Arbitrator Bruce Greyell concluded last week that the crown corporation failed to notify Eugene Blackburn, 67, who had been allowed to work one year past his 65th birthday, that he was eligible to apply for another deferment of his retirement.

The labor relations board arbitrator ordered the corporation to rehire Blackburn, a member of the Office and Technical Employees Union, and give him back pay from Aug. 4, 1978.

"If you get kicked in the ass as many times as I have, you just sit around waiting for the next one to come," Blackburn said Sunday of the corporation's plan. "But I think I'll win anyway."

Blackburn, who isn't entitled to a corporation pension, has been living on his old-age pension except for four months when he was temporarily rehired. He's been out of work again since July.

Union lawyer Michael Blaxland said the labor board rarely overrules decisions made by its arbiters, unless the labor laws have been misread.

Blaxland said Greyell looked at all facets of the situation before making his decision and he did not understand why ICBC was appealing.

Yarrows checks damage to rock-knocking carrier

A survey is being carried out by Yarrows Ltd. shipbuilders on extensive bottom damage to the 600-foot bulk carrier Star Opal. The ship, which reached the Esquimalt Graving Dock under its own power, was reported to have been damaged on rocks near Kitimat.

A Yarrows spokesman said tenders for the repair job would be called once the survey has been completed. That could be some time next week, he said.

Neil Hindle, business agent for the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, said that if Yarrows was the successful bidder the job would probably last six weeks. It was impossible at present, he said, to say how many workers would be required.

The Yarrows spokesman said the ship was owned by Hong Kong interests, but had been chartered by a Vancouver shipping firm.

Abandoned building has a few suitors

The Canadian Broadcasting Corp. has received several offers for its newly-built production centre at Blanshard and Kings Road in Victoria, corporation regional director Len Lauk said Sunday.

The station had to be abandoned because of cutbacks to the CBC budget.

Lauk said it may be some time before the corporation can dispose of the station because it is a public building and must first be offered to any government agency that might want it.

He said if none of the agencies accept, the Treasury Board can then approve the accepting of bids.

Soccer openers mostly formful

Chez Pierre Restaurant and Campbell River Wave provided the only upsets as Jackson Cup soccer play got underway on nine fronts Sunday.

The fifth division Chez Pierre squad surprised Gorge of the fourth division 3-0 at Bullen Park while the Wave of the third division trounced Cosmopolitan Royals of the second division 5-1 at Heywood Avenue Park.

A total of 41 teams are competing in the annual knockout competition of the Vancouver Island Soccer League and the next rounds of matches are Dec. 8 and 9.

Ross Woodland scored once in each half for Chez Pierre and Bill Hamilton connected in the second half while Keith Heppell picked up the shutout.

Lansdowne earns title

Christiens also scored in regulation time and John Hamilton completed scoring for the winners, who last nailed down the title in 1964.

Lansdowne's 3-1 victory over Colquitz provided a stepping-stone to the finals while Spencer advanced by beating Arbutus by the same score.

Colquitz earned third place by tripping Arbutus 3-1 and Port Alberni claimed fourth by edging Chemainus 2-1.

Undefeated clubs draw

The two undefeated teams of the Vancouver Island Men's Field Hockey Association went head to head Sunday and when they were finished they were still undefeated.

First-place Rebels I and second place Tigers I, who have a game in hand, battled to a scoreless draw at Windsor Park.

In other games: Castaways blanked Rebels II 3-0 at Windsor Park; Oak Bay downed Rebels III 4-1 at Beacon Hill Park; and UVic got by Tigers II 2-1 at the Oak Bay Oval.

Vikettes edged in volleyball

Simon Fraser University won three of five games Sunday to win an exhibition volleyball match with host University of Victoria Vikettes.

SFU won by scores of 15-13, 15-6, 15-11 while UVic recorded wins of 15-6, 16-14.

John, Alison top senior swimmers

There were only two double winners in senior events of a Vancouver Island regional swim meet Sunday at Centennial Pool.

John Vanderboor won the senior boys' 100-metre backstroke and 100-metre freestyle while Alison Noble of the UVic Vikings won the same events in the senior girls' division.

Big winners among the younger swimmers were Simon Bicknell of the Victoria Flying "Y" with five wins in the 10-and-under boys, Maria Eis of Juan de Fuca Cohos with four victories in the 11-12 year-old girls and Charlene Loughridge of the Cohos in the 10-and-under girls. Bicknell won the 400-metre freestyle, 50-metre breaststroke and 100-metre butterfly, freestyle and medley. Eis won the 400-metre medley, the 50-metre freestyle and the 200-metre freestyle and backstroke while Loughridge won the 100-metre butterfly, freestyle and medley and the 50-metre breaststroke.

Boyd Grealy of the "Y" won the 11-12 boys' 200-metre backstroke and 50-metre butterfly and backstroke.

Wayne Bonsdorf of Victoria Olympics won the 13-14 boys' 100-metre breaststroke and 200-metre freestyle, teammate Shelley Cuppage won the 13-14 girls' 100-metre butterfly and 50-metre freestyle and Chris Smith of Olympics won the 15-17 boys' 100-metre backstroke and freestyle events.

On Saturday the University of Puget Sound scored a 103-101 victory over a team combined of UVic and Victoria Olympic swimmers.

Comox skater wins

NORTH VANCOUVER — Darryl Clark of Comox captured gold and bronze medals in the B.C. sectional figure skating championships at North Shore Winter Club on the weekend.

Clark easily outdistanced the opposition in winning the novice men's title and he teamed with Rhona Soutar of the Racquet Club of Victoria for a third-place finish in the novice dance.

Jeff Mawle and Vanessa Howe, competitors in the 1978 and 1979 Canadian championships, brought the Racquet Club silver medals with a second-place finish in the junior pairs while Brad Forth captured a bronze for RCV in the pre-novice men. Susan Heathering was fourth in the junior women's and Nadine Padur finished fifth in the novice women's division.

Corrine and Vance Capron of Esquimalt also won bronze medals as they finished third in the pre-novice dance.

Dissidents take over

MONTREAL (CP) — Dissident shareholders have taken control of the board of directors of Campbell Chibougamau Mines Ltd. and have thrown out the old board.

In a vote count announced Monday, a slate headed by shareholders Ned Goodman and Myron Gottlieb of Toronto beat the established slate led by chairman Jack Blinkoff of New York and president Charles McAlpine of Toronto. The count was 1,905,525 to 1,037,136.

Goodman and Gottlieb were members of the Campbell Chibougamau board until August, when they resigned to protest a refusal by other board members to expand the company's holding in Peyto Oils Ltd. of Calgary to 51 per cent from the current 17 per cent.

Campbell Chibougamau operates copper mines near Chibougamau, Que., and also has gold, iron, asbestos and uranium interests. The legal head office is in Chibougamau but executive offices are in Toronto.

The company posted profits of 30 cents a share in the year ended June 30 but only after showing losses the four previous years.

Talking to reporters after a shareholders' meeting in Quebec City on Oct. 31, dissidents said the value of the company's assets has dropped and working capital has fallen by 80 per cent in the last five years. Goodman said the decision not to buy additional Peyto shares was "the straw that broke the camel's back."

Goodman's opponents accused him of a conflict of interest since the Peyto shares offered for sale belonged to clients of Beutel, Goodman and Co. Ltd., the Toronto investment counselling firm of which Goodman is a vice-president.

Toronto trading

TORONTO (CP) — Renewed strength in oil and gas issues held the stock market moderately higher at the close of active trading Monday.

Analysts attributed the strength in oil and gas related stocks to an apparently softer stand taken by the federal government toward oil company revenues.

Prime Minister Joe Clark has indicated he is backing away from his proposal to skim off part of higher oil revenues before they reach the companies and is considering instead Alberta's proposal that Ottawa tax only the industry's profits.

Trading in Noranda Mines Ltd. was halted briefly at the opening Monday pending dissemination of news that the company has completed a private sale of $14 million of its treasury shares at $19 a share. Noranda was up ⅜ at $18¾.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market struggled to move higher Monday despite worries about Iran, but turned mixed in the final hour on reports that Iranian authorities were asking a move from the U.S. dollar to a "basket" of currencies for oil transactions.

Analysts gave the market good marks for having held its ground for most of the session in the face of continuing bad news.

Stocks held firm on hostage news developments, but there were reports late in the day that Iran was calling on fellow members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to switch from the U.S. dollar to a group of currencies in oil trading. Such a move could cripple the dollar, analysts said, and the currency was fell at home and abroad.

Oil issues continued to be among the market's best performers. Analysts expect oil company profits to get a further boost from the higher oil prices caused by Iran's sale on the spot market of oil previously earmarked for the United States.

The most active issue on the NYSE, Occidental Petroleum, gained 1⅜ to $28⅜. The company last week predicted a hefty rise in fourth-quarter earnings, a forecast endorsed by many analysts.

The ransom business handsome business

By THOMAS HAYES
Colonist-N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Many of the world's largest companies, lacking a unified defence and willing to pay large ransoms, have become the favored targets of international terrorist groups. By one estimate, they have paid at least $250 million in ransoms in the last decade.

According to two reports on the problem issued last week, many companies have responded by hiring former military and government intelligence officers, establishing top-level "crisis management teams" to administer detailed plans to counter terrorists and calling in negotiators who specialize in dealing with terrorists.

Nevertheless, analysts dourly predict that the rising tide terrorism against business executives and members of their families will not soon ebb. Terrorist incidents this year are running at a rate almost double last year's level, according to the Conference Board, an independent business research organization.

"A great many terrorist incidents involving business are negotiated out fairly quickly, and you don't hear about them," Ruth Karen, author of a lengthy report on worldwide terrorism for the Business International Corp., said. "The problem is reaching dimensions where the need for international actions is becoming apparent."

Business International is a private research and information organization with 400 corporate members whose work is primarily focused on global development.

A committee at the United Nations debating terrorism has taken no action, Miss Karen, vice president for corporate public policy at Business International, said in an interview. So, with few other international forums capable of confronting the matter, the problem of dealing with terrorism against business is likely to be left to individual companies for many years, she added.

Business has become a more frequent target, in part because governments, led by the United States and Israel, have refused to negotiate with terrorists, according to Patrick McGuire, who wrote the Conference Board report, International Terrorism and Business Security.

McGuire also asserts that sympathetic governments (he mentioned those in Libya, Czechoslovakia, Iraq and South Yemen) have reportedly reduced their financial backing of terrorist activities because terrorists have found that corporations under duress are often good sources of money.

"In effect, business is the softer target now," McGuire said at a news conference. "Any strategist goes to the softer target." In general, terrorism has proved increasingly "cost- effective," he added. "One of the popular misconceptions is that terrorism is not very effective. But three out of four terrorist attacks since 1970 were considered successful."

The ransom insurance business, with policies commonly ranging in coverage from $1 million to $2 million, has mushroomed in recent years as a result of the terrorist activities. Lloyd's of London, Federal Insurance and the American Insurance Group are three major underwriters, according to McGuire.

These and other insurers prohibit companies from disclosing that they possess the ransom insurance on the belief that terrorists would then take aim at the insured executives. McGuire said, however, that there was no evidence of this. He estimated that as many as 200 companies included kidnapping coverage in their overall insurance plans.

Canada keeps saving

TORONTO (CP) — Canada is living up to its reputation as a nation of heavy savers.

The annual fact book of the Canadian Bankers' Association, made public Monday, shows that Canadians have more than four times as much money in personal savings accounts as they had 10 years ago.

The figures show that the chartered banks held almost $56 billion in about 25 million personal savings accounts in mid-1979, up from about $12 billion in 14 million accounts in 1968.

The average savings account at April 30 held $2,230 against $869 in 1968 and $1,972 a year earlier.

The fact book also reports that employment in banks has increased to more than 154,000, up 86 per cent in 10 years and that more than 95 per cent of the bank's 203,600 shareholders are resident in Canada.

Oil rumor sends U.S. dollar down

NEW YORK (AP) — The U.S. dollar fell against major currencies around the world Monday in nervous trading after conflicting reports on whether Iran will still accept dollars for its oil.

Gold prices held steady in Europe but drifted lower in New York. Dealers said bullion traders were hesitant to take major positions because of uncertainties in the confrontation between Iran and the U.S.

In Europe, currency dealers also described trading as light and nervous with few buyers of dollars. In New York, the dollar dropped sharply in early trading but recovered some of its losses later in the afternoon.

The Iranian foreign minister was quoted Friday as saying Iran would reject dollars as payment for its oil but that was later contradicted by the country's oil minister.

Former energy minister:

Freeze in dark or Jane Fonda?

CALGARY (CP) — A former federal energy minister said Monday Canada should build a network of nuclear power plants to serve growing U.S. energy needs.

"While such a project would not create any serious environment problems, it can be expected to meet political difficulties from the anti-nuclear lobby," said Donald Macdonald, 1972-75 energy minister in the former Trudeau government.

But Macdonald, also former 1975-77 finance minister, said the anti-nuclear arguments of persons like actress Jane Fonda should not be heeded.

"With the increasing attenuation of offshore oil supplies, the North American community is going to have to make a choice as to which is wiser: Jane Fonda or not freezing in the dark."

Speaking to a conference organized by the Canadian section of the World Energy Conference, Macdonald outlined general economic and political benefits and disadvantages for energy exports.

Among the general disadvantages were the dangers of running short of supplies and of exporting unprocessed energy that would create jobs elsewhere.

The export of nuclear power, however, would have no such disadvantage and it would bring Canada great economic benefits, he said.

Plants using Canada's CANDU nuclear technology would be built in Canada specifically for U.S. customers on long-term contracts.

"Energy in that form is not a raw resource but rather a highly finished export.

"The design of the facility, most of its fabrication and the raw material used in operation come from Canadian needs."

Funds to build such plants could be raised in U.S. money markets, leaving Canadian capital supplies free for other uses.

In return for favorable long-term prices, "the American customer might reasonably be expected to bear the risks of cost escalation during construction," he said.

Memory of '57 sobering for Esks

EDMONTON (CP) — The fate of an Edmonton football team more than 20 years ago is helping the current club prepare for Sunday's Grey Cup.

Edmonton advanced to the Canadian Football League championship with a 19-7 win Sunday over Calgary Stampeders and now face Montreal Alouettes in the Grey Cup final.

The 1957 Eskimos were considered perhaps the finest CFL team ever assembled. They had won three consecutive Grey Cups and were considered strong favorites for number four.

"Of all the years we could have won the Grey Cup, the year we should have won it without a doubt was 1957," recalls Johnny Bright, all-star fullback of that era.

But the Eskimos of 1957 failed to make it past the Western Conference final.

That sobering fact is remembered by the Eskimos of 1979. During the week preceding Sunday's Western final, several members of the 1957 team said this year's team may be even better.

Comparisons show the clubs to be extremely similar in many categories, including their 14-2 won-loss records. The 1957 Eskimos scored 475 points, the 1979 version 495 as both of them recorded numerous lopsided victories.

"The two teams have the same characteristics," says Don Getty, quarterback of the Eskimos in the 1950s. "Like the earlier Eskimos, this team seems to play only as hard as it needs to."

The current Eskimos also need only look back to the 1957 club for a reminder of how easy it is to be forgotten. While the 1957 Eskimos were the best Edmonton team until this year, it is the clubs of 1954-55-56 that are remembered — because they won the Grey Cup.

"It's a fact of life in sport," said veteran centre Bob Howes after Sunday's victory.

"If you don't win your last game, then nobody remembers.

"It's like that 1957 team. Maybe they were as great as everybody says they were. Best team of that era. But nobody remembers them because they didn't get there."

On Sunday, John Konihowski and Brian Kelly made outstanding touchdown catches in the second quarter to give the Eskimos the win.

The victory was Edmonton's second straight over Calgary in the western final.

The touchdown passes of 32 yards to Konihowski and 18 yards to Kelly were thrown by Warren Moon. The Eskimos' back-up quarterback came in early in the second quarter to wake up the Edmonton offence that starting quarterback Tom Wilkinson had been unable to get motivated.

Wilkinson failed to complete a pass in the 16 minutes he played and the Eskimos did not get a first down until midway through the second quarter, when Moon hit Tom Scott with a 13-yard pass. That was at 7:20 and was also Edmonton's first pass completion.

Calgary took a 3-0 lead late in the quarter on J. T. Hay's 37-yard field goal. But just 27 seconds later, Moon hit Konihowski to give the Eskimos the lead. Dave Cutler converted both touchdowns.

Edmonton's other points came in the fourth quarter when Cutler added a field goal and a single from 30 yards out and Hank Ilesic kicked a 43-yard single.

Hay kicked another field goal and a single to complete Calgary scoring.

The Eskimos head into the Grey Cup relatively injury-free despite a hard-hitting final against Calgary. The Eskimos had three key players temporarily sidelined in the Calgary game — wide receiver Waddell Smith, defensive halfback Ed Jones and defensive tackle Dave Fennell.

All three were declared healthy and will play next week, along with running back Jim Germany who said he played in more pain Sunday than ever before.

With impressive victories during the regular season it was the Eskimo offence that got much of the credit but it will be the defence that will determine Edmonton's fate Sunday.

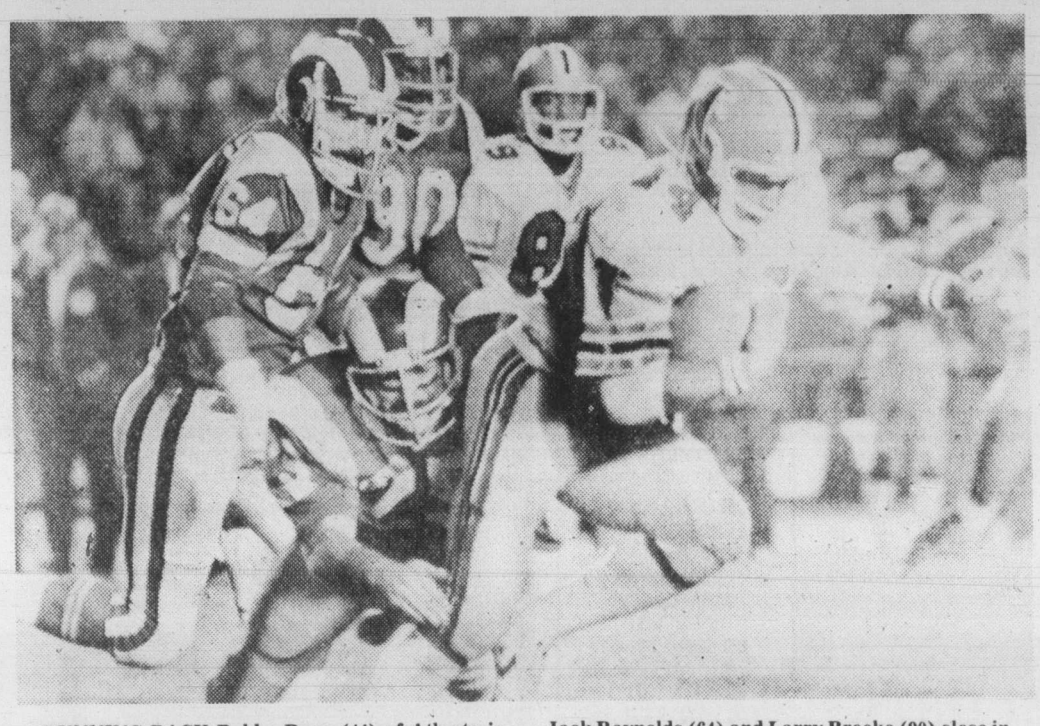

"The difference between this club and our club back then is that. . .this year's club wins with defence," said Bright.

Green
. . . unanimous choice

Crennel
. . . all-star oddity

RUNNING-BACK Bubba Bean (44) of Atlanta is tackled during first-quarter action Monday by Los Angeles safety Eddie Brown while Rams' Jack Reynolds (64) and Larry Brooke (90) close in to lend a hand if needed. The Rams scored 20-14 win to balance their record at 6-6.

New Esk on team

Green tops East vote

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Running-back David Green, the Canadian Football League's leading rusher this season with 1,678 yards, leads a list of 11 Montreal Alouettes named to the Eastern Conference all-star team.

Green was the only unanimous choice among the 26 players selected in balloting by members of the Football Reporters of Canada.

Left-tackle Dan Yochum and left-guard Ray Watrin, whose blocking helped Green to his conference record rushing yardage, are among five other Alouettes chosen for the EFC all-star offence. Wide-receiver Bob Gaddis, centre Doug Smith and place-kicker Don Sweet are the others.

Green, a 5-foot-10-inch 194-pounder, is the eastern nominee for outstanding player of the year. The Western Conference nominee is wide-receiver Waddell Smith of the Ednonton Eskimos. Green, a 26-year-old native of Jacksonville, N.C., who joined the Als late last season, scored 11 touchdowns while setting his conference record of 1,678 yards rushing on 287 carries — an average of 5.9 yards.

The EFC defensive lineup sports an oddity in that Carl Crennel, traded to Edmonton Eskimos after 13 games with Montreal this season, was picked the all-star middle-linebacker. Crennel will be in uniform for the Eskimos when they meet Montreal in the Grey Cup game in Montreal on Sunday.

Other Montreal defenders on the eastern all-star selection are tackle Glen Weir, end Junior Ah You, cornerback Dickie Harris and halfback Tony Proudfoot.

Completing the Eastern offence are quarterback Tom Clements of Hamilton Tiger-Cats, running-back Terry Metcalf of Toronto Argonauts, slotback Leif Pettersen of Hamilton, wide-receiver Martin Cox of Ottawa, guard Larry Butler of Hamilton, Toronto tackle Nick Bastaja, Ottawa tight-end Tony Gabriel and punter Ian Sunter of Toronto.

Of the 26 players selected, 10 are returning from the 1978 Eastern all-star team — Butler, Yochum, Gabriel, Sweet, Corrigall, Weir, Crennel, Zambiasi, Harris and Brune. It is the eighth consecutive selection for Gabriel and seventh in a row for Harris and Corrigall.

Clements, whose three-year reign as EFC all-star quarterback was interrupted last year by then Ottawa teammate Condredge Holloway, made it back to the lineup, even though he played only half the season at Hamilton following a trade with Saskatchewan Roughriders.

Rams fan playoff hopes

Los Angeles Rams balanced their record at 6-6 Monday night, and because they play in the National Football League's equivalent of the National Hockey League's Smythe Division, they're right in a battle for a playoff spot.

Vince Ferragamo, making his first NFL start, threw for two touchdowns and set up a third with his passing to lead the Rams to a 20-14 win over Atlanta Falcons in the nationally-televised Monday affair.

Result tied the Rams with New Orleans Saints for the lead in the National Conference West and left the Falcons in a tenuous position at 4-8.

Ferragamo, a third-year pro out of Nebraska, staked Los Angeles to a 14-0 halftime lead, connecting with Preston Dennard on a 29-yard scoring pass early in the first quarter, then hitting Billy Waddy with a 40-yard touchdown play in the waning moments of the opening half.

There was far more excitement in Sunday's 13 games, which were featured by the defeats of Pittsburgh Steelers and the Dallas Cowboys and more successful gambling by the entertaining Seattle Seahawks.

Impressive winners of their last four games, the defending-champion Steelers were cut down 35-7 by San Diego Chargers, who made five interceptions and recovered the ball three times after Pittsburgh fumbles. It is the most points scored against the Steelers in five years and the result forced them to share the lead, at 9-3, with Houston Oilers.

The Cowboys, losers of three of their last four games, are now in a three-way tie for the division lead with Washington Redskins and Philadelphia Eagles after their 34-20 handling by the Redskins. Joe Theismann's three touchdown passes and a hard-nosed defence which cause five turnovers kept the Cowboys under control.

Again playing it loose and with Jim Zorn, who threw for four touchdowns, setting a personal, and 1979 league high, by passing for 384 yards, the Seahawks were at their entertaining best. They made good on an onside kick, and a number of gambling fourth-down plays was topped late in the fourth quarter when punter Herman Weaver passed for a first down in a fourth-and-15 situation on the Seattle 35-yard line.

St. Louis 13, Philadelphia 16

Ron Jaworski connected with tight-end Keith Krepfle on a 40-yard touchdown pass in the fourth quarter to lift Philadelphia Eagles to a 16-13 win over St. Louis Cardinals.

N.Y. Jets 13, Chicago Bears 23

Mike Phipps threw two touchdown passes and Dave Williams scored twice to lead Chicago Bears to their fourth consecutive triumph, keeping them in the running for a wild-card playoff berth.

Green Bay 12, Buffalo 19

Baltimore 21, New England 50

Steve Grogan passed for two touchdowns and Stanley Morgan returned a punt 80 yards for another score as New England Patriots rode a 27-point second period to their rout.

Detroit 7, Minnesota 14

A pair of second-half touchdown runs by Rickey Young lifted Minnesota Vikings to a 14-7 victory over Detroit and sent the Lions reeling to their eighth straight defeat.

Miami 24, Cleveland 30

A 39-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Brian Sipe to wide-receiver Reggie Rucker in sudden-death overtime capped an aerial barrage that gave Cleveland Browns a 30-24 winover Miami Dolphins.

N.Y. Giants 3, Tampa Bay 31

Doug Williams hit Larry Mucker with touchdown passes of 10 and 42 yards and linebacker David Lewis returned a Phil Simms fumble 39 yards for another score as Tampa Bay Buccaneers crushed New York Giants.

Cincinnati 21, Houston 42

Quarterback Dan Pastorini directed Houston Oilers to a 21-7 second-quarter lead before leaving the game with a scratched eye and backup Gifford Nielsen completed his first six passes as the Oilers decked Cincinnati Bengals, 42-21.

Cougars obtain rights to young defenceman

Herder, a 15-year-old defenceman currently playing midget hockey in the Edmonton area, has been an apple of Cougars' eye for some time now.

The Western Hockey League club tried to acquire his rights a few weeks ago, when they traded defenceman Ryan McAdams to Great Falls Americans.

But McAdams balked when asked to report to the Eastern Division team and the deal for Herder was squelched.

McAdams returned home to Nanaimo, where he now toils for the B.C. Junior Hockey League Clippers.

On Monday, Cougars tried again for Herder, with more success.

Yachimec, an Alberta native, has already agreed to report to Montana.

He's been promised a starting assignment with the Americans, a team struggling at the bottom of their division. Great Falls has won only once in 15 starts and is 17 points behind the team they follow in the standings, Saskatoon Blades.

With Victoria, Yachimec — who has a brother, Bart, with Portland Winter Hawks — was the fourth right winger.

His departure brings Cougars down to 19 players, the league roster limit which comes into effect after Christmas.

Cougars are back in action tonight at Memorial Arena against Seattle Breakers. Game time is 8 p.m.

Breakers, who have defeated Cougars twice in six meetings, are seven points behind Victoria, in third place in Western Division standings.

Cougars defeated second-place Portland on Saturday night but the Winter Hawks grabbed back the two points they lost by edging Seattle 5-4 on Sunday.

However, Cougars have three games in hand, with a 14-4 record. They lead Portland by two points.

Victoria coach Jack Shupe, whose club was fined $1,000 by the league over the weekend, sits out the second game of a two-game suspension tonight.

In other Sunday action, Calgary Wranglers — first-place club in the Eastern Division — edged Billings Bighorns 5-4; Regina Pats blanked Brandon Wheat Kings 3-0; Lethbridge Broncos bombed Medicine Hat Tigers 11-5; and Saskatoon Blades dumped Great Falls 9-4.

Meanwhile, Cougars Grant Fuhr and Kevin Eastman remain one-two among WHL goalkeepers.

Statistics released Monday show Fuhr leading the league with a 2.44 goals-against average while Eastman runs a close second at 2.78.

Regina's Doug Wickenheiser climbed three notches in the scoring race and moved into the goal-scoring lead with 26. He still trails scoring-leader Doug Morrison of Lethbridge, who has 50 points, by three.

One mug too many

He mugged for the national televison cameras once too often — on a day Dallas Cowboys were fighting for their lives.

His sideline antics coupled with a lack of enthusiasm on the field during Washington's 34-20 rout of the Cowboys on Sunday was too much for some team-mates, and definitely irked the Dallas coaching staff.

Dallas coach Tom Landry called strongside linebacker Henderson into his office Monday and told him he was being placed on waivers. Henderson said he would just retire from professional football. Landry said clean out your locker.

"Thomas had no intensity...and his sideline escapades didn't help," said mild-mannered linebacker coach Jerry Tubbs, who was watching when Henderson held up a forefinger to say the Cowboys were No. 1, then pointed to a bandana tucked in his belt.

Free-agent pitchers hit it rich

An estimated $7.7 million was spent Monday when three free-agent pitchers signed with new clubs.

Topping the payoff list was hard-throwing Nolan Ryan, the American League strikeout king, who left California Angels to sign a four-year contract with Houston Astros for a reported $4 million.

Also switching clubs were relief-pitcher Don Stanhouse, who left Baltimore Orioles and also switched leagues by accepting a five-year $2 million offer from Los Angeles Dodgers, and righthander Rick Wise, who was reported to be moving from Cleveland Indians and the American League to join San Diego Padres because of a five-year pact offering $1.7 million.

Staying at home was catcher Manny Sanguillen of the Pittsburgh Pirates. He signed a multi-year contract with the series champions.

Ryan, the highest-paid free agent in baseball history, will share attention at Houston with J. R. Richard, major-league strikeout leader last season. Together, the two righthanders had 546 strikeouts in 1979. Ryan was 16-14 with the Angels and had 233 strikeouts. Richard has a multi-year contract with the Astros said to call for $800,000 annually but said there would be no contract jealousy as far as he was concerned.

Stanhouse, 7-3 in 1979 with 21 saves and a 2.84 earned run average, joins Dave Goltz, formerly with Minnesota Twins, as a new member of the Dodger staff.

Wise won 15 games this year and had a 3.85 earned-run average. His record for 15 major league years is 178-165.

Mets to be sold

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets' board of directors and shareholders announced their intention Monday to sell the National League baseball franchise before the 1980 season.

The announcement confirmed rumors that have circulated around the club for the last two years.

The board appointed an independent committee of two lawyers and an accountant "to make all necessary arrangements for the sale."

"The committee intends to contact parties who have expressed an interest in acquiring the team and evaluate all offers," the Mets statement said.

Among those rumored to be interested in acquiring the franchise are: New York industrialist Robert Abplanalp, Gulf and Western Inc., owner of Madison Square Garden; a group which includes longtime Mets player Ed Kranepool, and another group headed by M. Donald Grant, a minority stockholder in the team and for many years its chairman of the board.

Hanlon
. . . robs big guns

Smyl
. . . out with injury

'Routine' Hanlon performance leads Canucks past Canadiens

Vancouver Canucks and their fans were still pinching themselves Monday to make sure it wasn't just a dream.

But there was nothing to worry about, Sunday night's 5-2 triumph over the mighty Stanley Cup champion Montreal Canadiens is National Hockey League history.

It was only the Canucks third victory (counting one in the playoffs) over the Canadiens in 10 seasons. And it was the most cherished of all because it was the first on home ice and a standing room crowd of 16,413 was on hand at Pacific Coliseum to relish every minute of it.

Tonight they will attempt to add Los Angeles Kings to their string of victims but they will have to do it without sparkplug Stan Smyl.

The hardworking winger got the Canucks moving with some stiff bodychecks and his ninth goal of the season, but he was injured midway through the second period when he crashed into the end boards after being checked by Montreal defenceman Larry Robinson.

Smyl left the game at that point and it was later diagnosed that he had a deep bruise on his heel and the club announced Monday that he will be out for from seven to 10 games.

Rookie Brent Ashton replaced Smyl and his linemates Thomas Gradin and Jere Gillis scored goals in the second period as Vancouver took a 3-1 lead.

Rick Blight and Ron Sedlbauer scored for the Canucks in the third period while Pierre Larouche and Rejean Houle were the Montreal scorers.

Canucks are now 2-35-7 against Montreal in league play.

However, this season they are 1-0 and after 19 games have 23 points, only two fewer than the Canadiens.

They lead Chicago Black Hawks, second in the Smythe Division, by seven points, although Chicago has a game in hand.

Vancouver has tied team record with four straight wins, has lost only one of its last seven games and is 7-2-4 in its last 13.

Smyl's aggressive style has been a major contributer to the fine start but the key to the Canucks' success has been goaltender Glen Hanlon.

He has won five straight games and was brilliant again Sunday night.

Montreal outshot Vancouver 36-27, including 18 shots at Hanlon in the final period.

● Summaries — P. 20

"That was just a routine, normal game for Hanlon," offered coach Harry Neale. "He makes three or four unbelievable saves every night...he just made them in a row tonight."

The 22-year-old sophomore goaltender cried tears of joy after the game.

"That was the best thing that's happened to me, next to being drafted by Vancouver," said the Brandon native. "And I shared it with my parents. I phoned them (in Brandon) 10 seconds after the game."

"He epitomizes what our team is trying to do by being the hardest working player on the team," said Neale. "In Hanlon we've got a great leader and goalkeeper, and not many teams can say that."

Hanlon, who missed much of last season because of injury, has played 17 games this year and has a goals-against average of 2.76. Curt Ridley's 4.00 gives the Canucks a club goals-against mark of 3.00, fifth-best in the league.

Gerry Cheevers, Gilles Gilbert and Yves Belanger have a combined 2.41 for Boston Bruins to lead the NHL in goaltending.

Centre Marcel Dionne of Los Angeles continues to lead the points parade with 17 goals and 24 assists for 41 points, 10 more than right winger Guy Lafleur of Montreal, who has 17 goals and 14 assists.

In other games Sunday: Quebec Nordiques beat visiting Toronto Maple Leafs 4-2; Buffalo Sabres outscored Edmonton Oilers 9-7 at Edmonton; New York Rangers beat St. Louis Blues 5-3 at Madison Square Gardens; Atlanta Flames downed the Capitals 4-2 in Washington; Minnesota North Stars and the Black Hawks played to a 3-3 draw at Chicago and Pittsburgh Penguins edged the Jets 3-2 at Winnipeg.

Hartley honored

VANCOUVER — Gordon Hartley of Victoria, well-known on the Island for his contributions to his sport, has been formally recognized by the rest of the province.

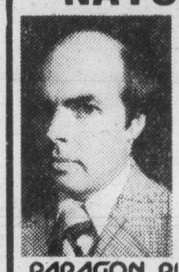

Hartley was proclaimed B.C.'s "Mr. Tennis" for 1979 at a B.C. Tennis Association banquet on the weekend.

The award was presented in honor of Hartley's continuing contributions to B.C. tennis and, specifically, in commendation of his efforts to teach youngsters the game.

He regularly conducts clinics and spearheads the city's annual Tennis in the Parks programs.

Spectrum retains crown

The defending B.C. champion edged Mount Douglas 12-15, 16-14, 15-2 in the Island final played at Mount Douglas.

Spectrum, Mount Douglas and G.P. Vanier of Courtenay will represent the Island in the provincial championships Nov. 19 to Dec. 1 at Fort St. John.

Puck, hoop wins lopsided

Five Juan de Fuca shooters picked up two goals each Monday night as the Gulls walloped Lake Cowichan Bairds 13-2 in South Island Junior 'B' hockey.

Tim Bowlier, Randy Smith, Dan Houston, Terry Coughlin and Frank Wendt were the double scorers while Guy Moran, Rick Milligan and Ross Anderson had singles. Ron Hughes and Tim White replied.

On Sunday, Bairds bowed to Esquimalt Legion 7-5.

Smith off pace but collects

Motor sports roundup

Roy Smith finished well back of the leaders Sunday but the Victoria driver still wound up with a big payday and one of his biggest moments ever in stock-car racing.

Smith was seven laps back when Benny Parsons took the checkered flag to win the Los Angeles Times 500 and $188,000 but Smith did get 21st place in the 36-car NASCAR Grand National race at Ontario, Calif. and picked up $3,190.

It was only the second win of the year for Parsons who edged out four other drivers in a furious dash to the finish. Bobby Allison took second, Cale Yarborough was third, Buddy Baker finished fourth and Richard Petty was fifth. Only eighth-tenths of a second separated the first five cars.

The fifth-place finish gave Petty his seventh NASCAR Grand National points championship. He went into the race trailing Darrel Waltrip by two points but Waltrip finished eighth.

A B.C. driver also fared well in the East as Taisto Heinone of Langley won the Rally of the Tall Pines at Peterborough to secure his third straight Molson rally Series title.

Meanwhile in Hong Kong, Geoff Lees of Britain won the 26th annual Macao Grand Prix thwarting a bid by Ricardo Patrese of Italy for a third straight triumph in the race.

The day's racing was marred by the death of Hong Kong driver Tung Chun-fai in a preliminary race.

Chun-fai, 33, was killed when his car collided with one drive by Bobby Chung of Hong Kong. Chung was listed in satisfactory condition.

Doc's Blues ousted fast

TOKYO (CP) — Canada got its first and only taste of competition at the World Cup women's softball championship Monday, losing twice and joining Hong Kong on the sidelines at the six-team tournament being held in two central Japanese centres.

Canada, represented by Doc's Blues of Vancouver, lost 2-0 to a Japanese selection team and 2-1 to New Zealand in a pair of preliminary-round games at Osaka. Hong Kong, meanwhile, dropped a 9-3 decision to the United States at Nagoya for its second straight defeat.

The Japanese selection squad and the Japan All-Stars, both 2-0, now advance to the final round-robin series, along with the U.S. and New Zealand, both 1-1.

Against Japan, Canada fell behind 1-0 in the third inning and the Japanese clinched it with a run in the final inning, the seventh.

However, the game with New Zealand went down to the final inning before being decided. The Vancouver club took a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the third, but the New Zealanders tied it in the top of the fourth and added the decisive run in the seventh.

UVic crews record wins

SEATTLE — Crews from University of Victoria captured eight of 20 events to win the team competition at at 15th annual Green Lake Regatta over the weekend.

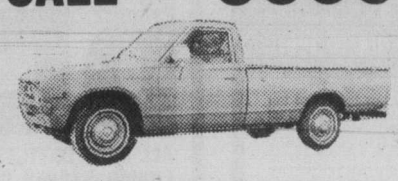

The men's varsity eight triumphed in its open event, despite an unlucky turn. Bowman Brian Elliott, who was also victorious in senior singles, had a oar come loose with 200 metres of the 1,000-metre course completed.

So, UVic won with only seven rowers.

Other UVic triumphs came in the senior fours, junior varsity eights and novice eights with the women's team prevailing in novice eights and lightweight eights.

Clipper coach encourages long shots

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With Bill Walton and Lloyd Free out of the lineup, San Diego Clippers are starting to feel like a bunch of long shots.

Brian Taylor, especially.

"Coach (Gene) Shue has been encouraging me to take the three-point shot, even to the point of having set plays," says Taylor.

The three-point shots were there for Taylor to take Sunday night — and he took them. He made five of the long-distance baskets to help the Clippers beat Milwaukee Bucks 112-96 in the National Basketball Association.

"At the start of the season, I didn't even try to take the three-point shots," said Taylor after scoring 23 points, "but now I'm going after them. It's a tough shot but I have confidence I can make it."

In other NBA games Sunday, Los Angeles Lakers walloped Indiana Racers 127-104, Kansas City Kings routed Denver Nuggets 109-92, Phoenix Suns whipped Golden State Warriors 99-95, New Jersey Nets nipped San Antonio Spurs 107-105 and Portland Trail Blazers stopped Seattle SupeSonics 100-95.

Along with Taylor's fine shooting exhibition, the Clippers got a big lift from Swen Nater's 21 rebounds and 13 points. Bingo Smith and Freeman Williams added 22 and 18 points, respectively, for San Diego. Milwaukee's Marques Johnson led all scorers with 34 points.

Ron Brewer scored 21 points and Tom Owens added 18 to lead Portland. Owens scored five of his points in the last 67 seconds to help the Trail Blazers hold off a late charge by the Sonics.

PARIS — The Dior Woman is a complete look.

Long associated with the fashion-conscious stars of yesteryear and the jet setters of today, Christian Dior is synonymous with expensive trend-setting styles. And fall-winter of '79-80 is no exception.

In an recent unusually long show — 111 garments — the Dior look is as distinctive today as it was in 1947 when his first collection, baptized the "New Look," was shown in Paris and San Francisco for such glamour gueens as Marlene Dietrich and Grace Kelly.

This new collection has two distinctly separate silhouettes. For day wear an Edwardian look, with broad shoulders, long hip-fitting jackets or tight-waisted with peplum, worn over short swirling skirts brings cheers of delight from such invited guests from many countries as Princess Caroline of Monaco — Grace Kelly's daughter.

The epitome of the evening silhouette is an off-the-shoulder, slim-draped waist black satin gown. Matching black satin bows adorn the dress and hair to complete the look.

Using such fine fabrics as wool cloth in block colors or large grid prints, tartan patterned cloth, herringbone or diagonal pattern tweed, tartan patterned etamine and mohair, doeskin, silk crepe, faille, taffeta, crepe Marocain in grid pattern print, moire heavy satin, silk velvet, velvet and embroidered cloque knitted fabric, the Dior designers have produced dramatic suits, coats and dresses.

Huge coats with astrakhan sleeves or yokes are shown over print dresses. Edwardian frockcoats with small astrakhan collars are worn with sober ample skirts. And numerous tailored suits with long peplumed jackets, either fully belted or with half-belts emphasize the waistline. High-necked white lawn blouses with ties complement these suits.

Belts — a major stress in the collection — are very wide and stiff, diagonally top-stitched in doeskin, kid-skin or fabric, or soft and supple with medallion buckle with thistle or grape-cluster design. The colors are red, chrome yellow, fir green, bordeaux, brick red, duck blue, amethyst, gray and black.

Handbags follow the theme in small muffs of astrakhan and passementerie or sheld-shaped in top-stitched doeskin with lacquer clasp or kid sports-type handbags with double flaps.

As usual, the Dior models wear Dior from head to toe including the accessories:

Lingerie, in angel-skin trimmed panties and brassieres, has embroidered tulle and is offered in white, black, brown or antelope. Opaque tights in chantilly sheer also are offered in black.

Jewelry is highlighted in Dior-designed gilt thistles, glass paste medallions for scarves, ties or belts or as earrings, grape clusters in choker necklaces, amethyst torsades or vine-leaf circular bracelets. Jet and gold earrings are seen in drops or Creole rings.

The Christian Dior makeup, created by Serve Lutens, gives the clear complexion look in peach, rose and beige tones. Porcelain hands with the new 1979-80 shades — Choc Clair, Brun net, Rose exact and Futur beige is yet another Dior look.

Along with the wide-shouldered furs and shaded-translucent eyeglasses, there is even a Dior hairstyle created by Christophe-Carita. It is the smooth shoulder-length hair styled into bullfighter coletas encircled by a black satin ribbon falling over to one side. (Have your beauty salon show you the coleta technique the first time.)

JOANNE WINSHIP

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Another opening, another show, the curtain's up and away we go."

Little did Cole Porter know when he wrote those memorable lyrics that they would be applicable to the fashion business as well as show business.

In the case of the annual spring-summer fashion shows, it's like seeing a six act play every day with each act in a different locale. After one week stands in Milan, London, and Paris and more than two full weeks in New York, the season has ended with echoes of the past and harbingers for the future.

Designers and models, like writers, directors and actors, work day and night for months preparing these shows and the fashion press who review them, like drama critics, must judge the results for the fashion buying public.

Most American designers played it safe by picking up cues from their French and Italian brethren. A few, such as Mary McFadden, Calvin Klein and Geoffrey Beene, remain true to their own individual vision and style. McFadden and Klein did concede to the shorter lengths.

Eveyone, everywhere latched onto 1980 for the obvious phrases — "a new decade," "the dawning of a new era," "a preview of the 21st century" — to describe the latest trends, including hemlines which have inched up to just above or at the knee.

Dress shapes and silhouettes fall into three categories: the chemise, slim but not restricting; the long torso and dropped waist with pleated, flared or circular skirt; and camisole tops or small fitted bodices with gores or full skirts, often under short jackets.

Most important, however, are the bi and tricolor theme for dresses, such as half purple, half white, or a dress with a gray top, a red middle and a black bottom. The colors have been divided or spliced in any manner of patterns, notably geometric, diagonal, triangular and asymmetric, and stripes that are straight, curved or zig zagged.

Solid colors are used with one or two other solids in spirals or ovals splashed on the front, the back or the side. They also are used for front panels, lapels, cuffs or a hem bordered in contrasting colors. This is considered modern and if done well, it is very effective.

One and two-piece sweater dresses lend themselves to a profusion of patterns, such as one sleeve striped and the other sleeve solid, or in contrasting patterns. Kansai Yamamoto's were the best in this category and Richard Assatly's stark linear look in slim linen and knits, often with matching jackets or coats, took the honors for solids.

Colors and prints, plus checks, stripes and polka dots are so myriad and varied that next spring and summer may be just one big kaleidescope of flower gardens, jungles, mountains, seascapes and deserts intermingled.

Levino Verna's monkey print was the most whimsical and Mary McFadden's Pompeiian prints are the most beautiful. Traditional navy and white and crisp black and white are almost neck and neck with palettes full of pastels and brilliant brights.

However it is the charcoals, grays, dark reds, ebony and teal, not usually associated with hot weather, that will look chic and cool when summer rolls around. Adri and Calvin Klein recommend these colors in their collections.

Sportswear and related separates, which American designers have always done better than anyone else; are more prevalent than ever. Suit jackets tend to be close and short, though there are enough blazers around. Skirts are flared or slim. The best tailoring comes from Ralph Lauren and Bill Kaiserman.

Pants are a story unto themselves this season. While there are a few classic looks around, the newest are wide legged, chopped off versions, stopping mid-calf or just above the ankle, and short pants suits. Cathy Hardwick's gray and black or black and white stripes are the freshest of the cropped look. Charles Suppon's Fred Astaire pants, fitted through the waist with wide straight legs, are tops in the long versions.

Pants suits or city shorts have tailored jackets over shirts and straight or cuffed bermudas. The best looking are Bill Atkinson's white linen worn with high heeled pumps and Don Sayres' sporty look worn with knee socks and walking shoes.

Career path leads model to the peak

By JUDY CREIGHTON

TORONTO (CP) — Over the hill at 32? Not fashion model Lynda Hill.

With the trend in marketing aimed at capturing career women in their 30s and 40s, Ms. Hill, a successful Toronto model, currently is at the peak of a career that has spanned 10 years in Canada, the United States and Europe.

This month, Ms. Hill, a five-foot-nine, 120-pound blonde will literally be saturated across Canada in music outlets as a sensuous dancer on the cover of a new disco album.

Her face and lithe figure are well known. She was the blonde bombshell in the white gown showing a leg on Secret pantyhose billboards; she has been photographed many times for fashion magazines like Chatelaine and Flare, and she has appeared in national television ads.

Ms. Hill is also a much-sought-after runway model, and with the Canadian fashion industry enjoying an all-time high she has just completed her busiest season ever.

Her income from the frenetic career has earned her at least $45,000 this year, which she has invested in a small house she renovated herself during the summer.

But her madcap career, love of parties and entertainment friends hardly classifies Ms. Hill as a homebody. She lives alone by choice, dates often but "selectively" and occasionally takes up to year-long jaunts to other countries to avoid over-exposure in Canada.

"A model has to keep moving to be a success," she said in a recent interview at her home. "I like Canada and will always come back because I get tired of living in hotels."

She started her career as a dancer in her teens, but her weight made it impossible to continue "because most male dancing partners were the same weight or shorter."

A typical day in Ms. Hill's life involves rising at 6 a.m., at which time she showers, shampoos and sets her hair. After a light breakfast of fresh fruit and yoghurt she is off fashion show rehearsals until 11 a.m.

Nothing beat a knit this year.

Pick any fashion category—coats, dresses, suits, co-ordinates, or even evening separates—and you'll find them in knit.

Designers are knitting up everything from delicate silk thread to velvety chenille to great, thick, loopy wools so dense they look like fur.

They've used color and texture to give us the most witty, touchable and desirable knit clothes we've ever had.

ANN LANDERS

Draw solves bride's dilemma

Dear Ann Landers: My closest friend is getting married soon and needs your help in making a very important decision.

"Harriet's" mother left her father when she was just a toddler. Her mother has remarried, and Harriet thinks the world of her stepfather — even though she loves her natural father very much and sees him all the time.

Harriet's mother is a very domineering person. She insists on paying for the wedding, selecting the reception hall, etc. She also wants her husband to give the bride away.

My friend is no match for her mother, but she has made one thing clear: if she can't have her own father walk her down the aisle, she will not permit her stepfather to do the honors. The question is this: Would it be proper if Harriet's mother walked her down the aisle? Or should Harriet walk alone? Please don't suggest a favorite uncle, because she has so many she doesn't want to risk hurting anyone's feelings.— Friend Of The Puzzled Bride

Dear Friend: It would be inappropriate for the bride to walk down the aisle alone, or with her mother. I suggest that she put the names of her uncles in a hat and ask you to draw the name of the one who is to walk her down the aisle. Then no one will be offended.

Dear Ann Landers: We raised our only grandchild in a loving home. We saved the money her father sent us for her support. When the time came, she was able to go to college and have a car.

On her 18th birthday, we went to a lawyer and had everything put in her name. She met and fell in love with a boy who didn't have anything. We fed, clothed and loved him as if he were our own. Now they are married, and he has come to our home demanding that we give his wife the balance of the money.

We refused, so they are not speaking to us. I still feel that to give them this money would be the same as throwing it away. But is withholding it worth the price? — Gram And Gramps

Dear Gram and Gramps: There are some conflicting statements in your letter. For example: If you put everything in your granddaughter's name on her 18th birthday, why do you still have the legal right to withhold the money from her?

Of course, it would be sad if the young woman squandered her savings, but it's hers to do with as she pleases. Better talk this over with the attorney who handled the transaction when she was 18. If possible, the money should be transferred to the granddaughter and not her husband — just in case.

Dear Ann Landers: Your letters from "Mama's Boys" and "Daddy's Girls" made me decide to write you one about a "Mama's Girl." I need help.

When I was going with Cathy she always said her mother would come first, and now she's proving it. We haven't had an evening alone for six weeks. Either her mother is here for supper, or we are at her place. Last Sunday Cathy got the flu and went to her mother's house to be nursed back to health. I am by myself. Where do I stand? — Lancaster, Pa.

Dear Lan: Second to your mother-in-law, which is where Cathy said you stood before she married you. You can't say she didn't warn you, Bub.

Dear Ann Landers: Me writing to Ann Landers. What a laugh! But the problem isn't very funny.

I went with "Hank" for three years. We're not kids (both 30). We talked over all the things we thought were important before we had a big Catholic wedding.

I have six nieces and seven nephews and I'm crazy about kids. "Hank" said he wanted at least four.

We've been married two years and I'm dying to start a family. "Hank" has changed his mind. Children make him nervous all of a sudden. He keeps telling me about the trouble people at work are having with their kids. He won't even consider adoption.

I want a baby so bad I can't stand it. My sister is pregnant with her third, and when I'm around her I feel like bawling. What should I do? — Hitched To A Stubborn Ox

Dear Hitched: Discuss this with the clergyman who performed your marriage ceremony. I don't see how you can have a life of contentment with a man who broke his word about a matter that seems vital to your happiness.

Your Good Health

Dear Dr. Donohue: Please explain psoriatic arthritis. I have read about osteoarthritis and rheumatoid arthritis, but not about this kind. I have had psoriasis for the past 35 years, but for the past five years I have had pains in the neck, finger joints, knees, elbows and in the lower spine. I'm 57. Until recently, the psoriasis was limited to my scalp and armpits, but recently the finger and toenails decided to have a fling, and they are a total mess. — Mrs. E.M.

Psoriatic arthritis is a very special and peculiar kind of arthritis. It has NOTHING to do with the other kinds you mention. About 5 per cent of persons with skin psoriasis develop the joint pain. Hands, feet and the spine are frequently affected. Hand swelling gives rise to the term, "sausage fingers."

Psoriatic arthritis is diagnosed by tests to rule out the common forms of arthritis (rheumatoid and osteo-, for examples).

It is a strange ailment about which we know little. There does not have to be a relationship, for example, between the degree of joint pain and the degree of visible psoriasis. The only treatment is that used for joint pain and for regular skin psoriasis. Aspirin may not be as helpful in this form of arthritis. A dermatologist can advise about treatment for the skin signs.

Dear Dr. Donohue: What's the meaning of the original serpent and rod on the M.D. insignia, the one you see on the coat, shirt, or on the doctor's office sign? — K.G.

The serpent coiled around the rod is the staff of Aesculapius, the Greek god of healing. The Greeks attributed mystical qualities to snakes, which is why it became symbolic of healing and of the medical profession. You've heard of snake oil?

The serpent and staff is on confused with the Caduceus, which was the magic wand of the messenger of the gods, Hermes, or Mercury. This wand has two intertwined snakes with wings at the top. It is the symbol of the Army Medical Corps (to which I once belonged, incidentally) — also of the Bell Telephone Company.

Enough of mythology and back to medicine, which has enough of the former to deal with as it is.

Dear Dr. Donohue: A friend of mine claims her 30-year-old daughter is ill with a disease called "lupus." Hope I spelled it correctly. Another acquaintance a retired nurse, said there is no such disease. Who is correct? — Mrs. W.P.

Well, of course, the mother of the lupus victim is correct. It's been written about in this column often. Just briefly, it's a tissue inflammation disorder and about 90 per cent of the patients are young women. A milder form affects only the skin. Lupus societies have chapters around the country, and much research continues into this troublesome problem.

Unions dare anti-strike law

QUEBEC (CP) — The first 15 charges have been brought against unions violating a special Quebec law suspending the right to strike for 275,000 public sector employees.

A spokesman for Justice Minister Marc-Andre Bedard said Monday the charges were placed following investigations by special crown prosecutors assigned to look into breaches of the law throughout Quebec.

He added that another series of charges would be laid today, once the necessary proof had been gathered.

Unions violating the law, which bans strikes until Nov. 30 by the 275,000 workers involved, are subject to fines as high as $1,000 daily.

Individual union members could be hit by fines of as much as $100 a day under the law which was rushed through the Quebec national assembly last week.

The charges were laid against unions, rather than union members, because it was more difficult to prove individual strikers were breaking the law, the spokesman said.

Illegal strikes by non-medical support staff limited operations Monday at most of Quebec's 200 hospitals and threatened to spread to others if no settlement was reached by Wednesday.

About 45,000 hospital support workers, affiliated with the Confederation of National Trade Unions, walked out of about 170 hospitals across the province, defying the emergency law.

A spokesman for a government monitoring board said essential services were being maintained in most centres, but at others volunteers were filling in, serving food and cleaning wards.

In Quebec City, Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau described the walkouts as "useless and irresponsible."

One common front leader, Robert Gaulin of the Centrale de l'Enseignement du Quebec, said a television address on the strike by Premier Rene Levesque Monday night was an attempt "to go over the heads of union representatives, union structures and the independent organizations workers have established for themselves."

He said the Parti Quebecois government was trying to challenge the "legitimacy and representivity" of unions and was "putting a knife to the throats" of public sector workers as they tried to negotiate contracts.

Picket lines surrounded many hospitals, and at Notre Dame Hospital in downtown Montreal police were called in when pickets refused to allow non-striking employers to enter the building.

Two strikers, including CNTU firebrand Michel Chartrand, were arrested and charged with assault and disturbing the peace.

At other centres, workers affiliated with other public-sector unions —which were named in the emergency law but are not striking — respected the picket lines.

Another 30,000 support workers affiliated with the Quebec Federation of Labor, a second partner in the 200,000-member common front of public-sector workers, will likely join the CNTU workers on strike Wednesday if no settlement has been reached.

Delay tactics slow Twin Otter inquiry

OTTAWA (CP) — The commission of inquiry into air safety was told Monday an investigation of 29 Twin Otter accidents between 1976 and 1979 had been impeded because the manufacturer did not co-operate in providing information or documents.

John Sopinka, the commission's lawyer, said eight of the accidents were killed a total of 15 people. He was reporting to Mr. Justice Charles Dubin, who is chairing the first general inquiry into air safety in Canada.

Sopinka said it was necessary to issue subpoenas on the crown corporation de Havilland, maker of the Twin Otter, to obtain the testimony and documents required for the investigation.

The commission is trying to determine whether two problems connected with Twin Otters might have caused any of the eight fatal accidents.

The faults were identified at commission hearings as corrosion in the flap rod system and a tendency for a propeller to go into reverse pitch.

The transport department and de Haviland both took action on the flap rod problem, "but it is not clear that any action has been taken with respect to the propeller problem," Sopinka said.

That raised the issue of whether the department was sensitive to service problems on aircraft and whether its checks on aircraft were sufficient, he said.

Because de Havilland withheld papers, Sopinka said, "it will not be possible during these two weeks to determine whether any of these (fatal) accidents were directly caused by the two problems referred to."

The commission is to spend its first two weeks reviewing how the department determines what aircraft are safe to fly and how it makes ongoing checks to see that they remain safe in the air.

Sopinka said appointment of the commission didn't mean the public should lose confidence in Canadian aviation.

"A number of circumstances, however, indicate that an appraisal of the laws and practices and procedures is warranted," he added.

"We are the flyingest nation in the world," he said. There were about 21,600 aircraft registered in Canada in 1978 and one in every 1,000 Canadians either owned or leased an aircraft.

There were 96 fatal crashes in 1978.

Canadians had entrusted the transport department with air safety and the commission of inquiry would ask the department to account for its stewardship, Sopinka said.

Mrs. Valence surprises with her plea of guilty

MONTREAL (CP) — Jeanne Valence pleaded guilty Monday to a charge of extortion arising from the 82-day kidnapping of credit union official Charles Marion in 1977.

Within several minutes of the surprise plea, which cut short a trial that was expected to last several months, Mrs. Valence was freed on the main charges of conspiracy, kidnapping and forcible detention.

The prosecution also received permission from Superior Court Justice Jean-Guy Boilard to drop a second extortion count. The judge scheduled a sentence hearing Wednesday.

The move came at the last minute, just as lawyers were about to start choosing the jury from a crowd of about 100 persons who packed the courtroom waiting for proceedings to start. Mrs. Valence, 43, was taken to jail to await sentencing.

By pleading guilty to the single charge, Mrs. Valence, who appeared drawn and pale, followed the trail blazed by her husband, Claude, during a three-month trial last year.

Valence, 45, was acquitted of the main charges and convicted on the same extortion charge last January. The jury verdict in his case was considered as an impressive victory, based on defence arguments that Marion was involved — to some extent — in his own kidnapping.

Valence testified that he participated in the affair while under the impression, gained from a third person, that Marion was a willing victim in his capture and subsequent 82-day sojourn in an underground hideout, actually a large covered hole.

This contention was firmly denied by Marion. Valence is free on bail pending an appeal of his six-year prison term for extortion.

Ronnie's record a hot one

It was more than an ordinary case of heartburn. "My stomach felt like a small campfire," Ronnie Farmer said after gulping down 100 fiery jalapeno peppers in Pampa, Texas. "I really hurt, and my throat felt like sandpaper," he said Sunday. The 29-year-old plumber ate the peppers in a record 14 minutes and 19 seconds as 75 spectators watched.

Actress Maureen Stapleton's tavern in Troy, N.Y., will not go on the auction block after all to settle an overdue tax bill. She has paid more than $5,000 for three years of back taxes on the Albia Tavern and a vacant lot next door, said city treasurer Barbara Flynn.

A grand jury in White Plains, N.Y., Monday cleared the girlfriend of Rolling Stones guitarist Keith Richard of any involvement in the death of a 17-year-old Scott Cantrell boy at the musician's South Salem, N.Y., mansion last July. But the grand jury indicted Anita Pallenberg, 37, on two charges of criminal possession of a weapon, a misdemeanor.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko arrived in Madrid on Monday on a three-day official visit during which he is expected to urge the Spanish government to stay out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Students at the University of California at Irvine are decamping from dormitories and setting up at a campus trailer park. It's both cheap—$70 a month, including utilities—and convenient, the students say. "I'm really excited about this," said Marty Rigby, a 31-year-old graduate student.

Violinist Isaac Stern played Happy Birthday for him, telegrams from around the U.S. congratulated him, fireworks crackled over the city's waterfront and the All-Philadelphia Boys Choir serenaded him. That is how maestro Eugene Ormandy celebrated his 80th birthday Sunday.

With shoulder-length grey hair and a painted van depicting him as Wyatt Earp, Ron Goebel doesn't cut a typical figure as Republican state legislator. Thinking he might interest Rolling Stone magazine, the Pittsburgh representative fired off a letter. But the magazine wasn't interested in his offer of a cover story and photo.

Israeli prices jump in blitz on inflation

TEL AVIV (AP) — In an effort to halt Israel's almost 100 per cent inflation, the government Monday abolished many government subsidies, squeezed credit to industry and announced cuts in government employment and public projects.

The program announced by Finance Minister Yigal Hurvitz ended intervention by the government to maintain low prices for necessary goods and services.

The price of one quart of milk doubled to 48 cents, an eight-ounce cup of cottage cheese went to 50 from 25 cents; city bus fares increased to 19 from 13 cents and the price of a 20-ounce bottle of cooking oil went to 95 from 45 cents.

The announcement, which drew immediate criticism from manufacturers and organized labor, marked the first in a series of tough economic measures promised by Hurvitz, who took over the economic portfolio 10 days ago.

Deadly-cargo bill introduced

OTTAWA (CP) — Uniform safety standards for the transport of dangerous goods such as poisonous chemicals will be established under a bill introduced Monday in the Commons.

Transport Minister Don Mazankowski introduced the legislation after saying the government might establish an independent inquiry into the recent derailment of a freight train carrying poisonous chlorine gas and propane in the Toronto suburb of Mississauga.

The Canadian transport commission, a federal regulatory agency, had already announced it would hold a public inquiry in December into the accident. But Mazankowski said he was sympathetic to critics who said the commission would, in effect, be investigating itself.

The bill, which requires provincial co-operation to work, will establish a hazardous goods transport safety code; will require inspectors with expertise in dangerous goods; and will hold shippers liable for accidents if the transport company is not at fault.

In an interview, Mazankowski said safety standards now differed across the country; no inspectors were required to check the packaging and labelling of hazardous goods; and the question of who was liable to the public for the Mississauga incident was in a muddle.

He described the bill as enabling legislation, which means the federal government sets the standards and enables the provinces to enter an agreement to follow them.

However, the federal government has the power to impose the standards if one year of negotiation with a province fails to produce an agreement.

The penalty for violating the new safety code will be maximum fines of $50,000 for the first offence and $100,000 for each subsequent offence. Penalty for conviction on indictment will be a maximum two-year prison term.

Mazankowski told reporters it was no coincidence the bill came right after the Mississauga incident, which forced thousands of persons to evacuate, but stressed, "It's not necessarily clear that this bill would have prevented the incident."

MP move will give disabled tax break

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons unanimously approved a private member's resolution Monday to make more of the country's disabled eligible for a $1,000 tax deduction.

The resolution, introduced by Benno Friesen (PC — Surrey-White Rock-North Delta), was endorsed by all parties in less than 45 minutes of debate.

The motion broadens the definition of handicapped under the Income Tax Act to allow disabled persons to claim the $1,000 tax deduction if they cannot look after their personal needs and their mobility is restricted.

Canada urged to grow it alone in food

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada should seriously consider the goal of achieving self-sufficiency in food production, NDP agriculture critic Lorne Nystrom said Monday.

Nystrom told the Commons that Canada had a net deficit approaching $1.8 billion in food production last year if grains and oilseeds were excluded from trade figures.

And some experts believed the country could become a net importer of all types of food and food products by the year 2000, he said.

The MP for Yorkton-Melville made the comments during debate on a bill to ratify a host of changes in tariffs on food products that were negotiated by the former Liberal government.

Nystrom said higher tariffs would give additional protection to producers and encourage greater Canadian self-sufficiency.

The tariff changes—mostly affecting fruits, vegetables and processed foods—were given third reading Monday and sent on to the Senate.

In general, the bill provides for slightly higher tariffs over-all, with some raised and others lowered.

Prepare to drain Mica —NDPer

OTTAWA (CP) — A New Democratic Party MP called on Prime Minister Clark Monday to be prepared to have the water behind the giant Mica dam in British Columbia drained because the dam is on insecure ground.

Jim Fulton of Skeena said reports in the hands of British Columbia Hydro show that the dam across the Columbia River in the B.C. interior is on unsafe ground.

He warned that the cities of Revelstoke and Trail are vulnerable. He asked Clark to get copies of the reports, one of which was made by the university of British Columbia, and be prepared to drain the dam.

Raid guides never approved

OTTAWA (CP) — Guidelines used by the RCMP to raid the home of an Ottawa journalist during an investigation of leaked defence department documents were not approved by cabinet, Prime Minister Clark said Monday.

Clark said in an interview they appeared to be guidelines drafted by the public service that were never endorsed by the former Liberal government.

On Friday, Clark told his weekly news conference he planned to change regulations established by the previous government that permitted the RCMP to raid the home of freelance journalist Jo Ann Gosselin.

Clark made his comments Monday after Terry Sargeant (NDP—Selkirk-Interlake) asked in the Commons whether Clark would release the guidelines.

Two RCMP officers arrived Nov. 8 at the home of Ms. Gosselin seeking defence department documents she used to write stories on negotiations between the government and two companies for a $2.5-billion fighter aircraft contract.

When Ms. Gosselin refused to hand over the documents or name the person who gave them to her, four other RCMP officers outside her home were summoned and searched the premises, seizing a carton of personal papers.

Defence Minister Allan McKinnon told reporters the official in his department who authorized the raid did not realize the guidelines lacked cabinet endorsement.

Clark said last week that the RCMP should be allowed "only in extraordinary circumstances" to investigate leaks to journalists from government departments.

RCMP laid charges against Ms. Gosselin, who refused to say whether the RCMP found the documents being sought.

The news stories said a government study recommended the defence department reject a proposal from General Dynamics, one of the two American companies bidding for the fighter contract.

M. V. Chesnut's Garden Notes

Several times in this column I have had occasion to mention my grandmother's home in the country where, as a small boy, I was taken to visit every summer.

One feature which I remember well was a huge old lilac bush planted close enough to the back door so the intoxicating fragrance of its blooms would waft through the screened porch tacked on to the kitchen proper, and equipped with a kerosene cook stove.

Because of these memory associations, I think that if I were just starting out to plant up a garden, the very first shrub I would select would be a lilac.

I must admit this choice would be dictated more by the heart than the head, for the lilac has many faults as a garden shrub. It makes a rather leggy and ungainly bush eventually, and one which is all out of proportion for a small city garden.

Nor can I recommend it as a labor-saving shrub, for a neglected lilac can be a real eyesore when covered with ugly grown seed pods, and taking off the spent blooms before they can set seed is a miserable, monotonous and time-consuming job.

Suckers, too, can be a problem. Some lilacs send up a veritable forest of sucker shoots from the roots, and these have to be removed the hard way — by digging down and twisting the suckers free from the roots.

In spite of these black marks, though, I wouldn't want a garden without at least one lilac in it.

Lilacs can be planted any time after the leaves have fallen, from November right through until the buds are swelling in the spring. While the best time is right after leaf-fall and while the ground still has some residual warmth, I have moved a pretty big lilac in January, when I had to use a pickaxe to break up a two-inch layer of frozen soil before I could excavate the planting hole.

This plant likes a fair amount of lime in the soil, preferably in a mild, long-lasting form such as pulverized limestone, about four cupfuls per square yard, well mixed into the planting site. Unlike hydrated lime, this pulverized limestone can be dug in at the same time as old rotted manure without any serious loss of nutrients.

It is important to plant your new bush fairly deeply. If you buy your lilac from a nurseryman, the soil marks on the stem will indicate its previous depth; in replanting, set it in two to three inches deeper than this.

Your new lilac may or may not bloom next spring, depending on its age and size; it will almost certainly bloom in 1981, but somewhat sparingly and with undersized blooms, and it won't be until the following spring that the plant really gets into its stride.

In passing, I might say that all the really worthwhile garden subjects are a bit slow in reaching their peak of productivity.

Now about varieties: If you are hungry for the old-fashioned lilac fragrance, plant Souvenir de Louis Spaeth, which bears enormous trusses in deepest purple. Mme. Lemoine is a fine, sweetly scented double white, while Belle de Nancy is a clear, satiny pink.

The newer hybrids have bigger trusses of bloom, bigger individual florets and perhaps more vivid colors, but most of them are a bit disappointing in the fragrance department.

Some of the best are President Grevy, blue; Esther Staley, pink; Alice Eastwood, claret-purple; A. A. Brand, rose red; Pink Pearl, a late bloomer, and Moonglow, a pale blue suffused with creamy pink.

Back in 1952 there was quite a hoo-ha over a new yellow lilac from Holland called Primrose. I couldn't wait to get one of these even though it cost an arm and a leg, and it is a pretty thing, but I couldn't honestly call it yellow. Mine bloomed in a pale cream shade, and with a rather peculiar scent which was not at all pleasing.

Berman wanted to buy Shaw's house. This was okay with Shaw because he wanted to buy a Victorian home in Glencoe owned by the Katz family. Before Berman could buy Shaw's house, he had to sell his. Once Berman paid Shaw, then Shaw could buy the Victorian home from the Katz estate (Mrs. Katz died at the age of 90 and none of her children wanted it).

Berman put an advertisement in the newspaper saying his house was for sale. He heard from every real estate agent in the area. They all wanted to represent him in making the deal. One said she had a buyer — a Mr. Hardy.

Hardy came out to the house and said he would like to buy Berman's home, but in order to do so Hardy would have to sell his own house in Silver Lake. He put it on the market and the Gluckstern, who were about to have another child, thought the Silver Lake place would do just fine.

Gluckstern did not own a house — he rented. This seemed to solve the problem of Gluckstern having to find a buyer for his house first. Gluckstern told Hardy he would get a loan from the bank. Hardy called Berman and told him not to sell his house because he had a buyer for the Hardy home. Berman immediately called up Shaw and said, "I think I can swing the deal."

Shaw got so excited he called the Katz family lawyer and told him to draw up the papers.

Everyone sat around kitchen tables talking about how they were going to fix up their new houses.

Then the Glucksterns went to their bank and asked for a mortgage for the Hardy house.

The bank officer said, "We don't have any mortgage money."

"What kind of money do you have?"

"We don't have any money at all. If you'd like to open an account with us, we'll give you a toaster for your new house."

"Why would we need a toaster for our new house when we can't borrow the money to buy it?"

"It's not my fault. It's people like Landsberg who are responsible."

"Who's Landsberg?"

"He had an account here. But he withdrew all his money and put it in Treasury bonds. He told us that when we pay as much interest as the U.S. government does, he'll put his funds back in."

Gluckstern went to see Landsberg and said, "I can't buy Hardy's house because of you."

"Who told you that?" Landsberg said.

"Atwood, at the bank. He said you took all your money out and now he can't make any real estate loans."

"Atwood has plenty of money," Landsberg said. "He just doesn't want to tie it up in long-term mortgages. Ask him for a 90-day loan at 18 per cent and he'll give it to you in a minute."

Gluckstern was not mollified. "How would you like it if someone took all his money out of the bank and prevented you from buying a house?"

"I have a house and a 5 per cent mortgage. Don't complain to me. Go tell your story to the U.S. Treasury. They're the ones who are paying the high interest rates."

Gluckstern went to see the man at the Treasury who deals in bonds. "How come you're paying higher interest rates to Landsberg than the bank does?"

The Treasury bond man said, "Because the government needs the money."

"What does the government need the money for?"

"Well, for one thing, to help people find housing. Whether you know it or not, Americans are having a tough time these days buying a new home."

Things I Learned En Route to Looking Up Other Things:

● That more than 50,000 different man-made chemicals are currently in commercial and industrial use, and between 500 and 1,000 new chemicals are put on the market every year.

● That the total amount of energy emitted by a quasar in one second would supply all of Earth's electrical needs for a billion years.

● That a "luncheon" prepared by Careme, the great French chef, for the Prince Regent of Britain on holiday in Brighton encompassed 124 different dishes, beginning with eight soups, and including 40 entremets and 42 entrees. (There were eight different preparations of fish alone.)

● That a single flower of the common juniper can shed 400,000 pollen grains, which drift over huge distances, even thousands of miles seaward. (This is how some plants "migrate" among the continents.)

● That Lord Acton, the 19th-century historian, assembled more than 25,000 separate notes for his long-contemplated History of Liberty, which has been called "the greatest book that was never written."

● That just one gram of a malignant tumor already contains a million cancer cells. (Unlike most normal cells in the body, which are programmed to age and die in their own time, cancer cells ultimately die only with the body they kill.)

● That the Eskimo was able to dispense with all plant food because he ate at least half of his meat raw, including the fat and internal organs of the animals. (With such a diet, he obtained every vitamin and mineral, as well as all the protein, necessary for human nutrition.)

● That fishing is always best in colder waters, for tropical seas are impoverished in nutrients and contain far fewer game fish.

● That all the numerous "Bristol" hotels throughout Europe are named for one man, who neither built them nor owned them: the fourth Earl of Bristol, who was also Bishop of Derry, and spent the vast revenues of his see living magnificently on the Continent. (He travelled on his own yacht, with an armed crew, a company of artists, sculptors and great ladies, a mobile kitchen, and a well-stocked cellar of wines and brandies.)

● That the original Colt "six-shooter" revolver was a five-shooter. (It was more practical to produce than a six-shot model based on Colt's patented design.)

● That many kinds of lizards break off their own tails when attacked, in order to distract the predator while the lizard itself escapes. (The animal grows a new tail very readily, though shorter than before.)

● That "margarine" should be pronounced, but never is, with a hard "g," since it is derived from margaric acid. (American dictionaries long ago gave up the fight.)

● That in some fertile areas, several billion earth-inhabiting roundworms or nematodes occur per acre in the top five inches of soil.

● That the Siriono Indians of the upper Amazon don't seem to mind copulating in full view of others, but may be shamed into exile if caught eating in public!

James Bacon's Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD — Carol Channing is the No. 2 queen in London these days with the reviews Hello, Dolly! is getting.

The critic for the Evening News wrote: "Fourteen years ago, I found this musical sentimental and tedious. Last night, I found Dolly transformed. I can tell you in two words — Carol Channing."

Carol dropped me a note along with the reviews, "I now have a new silver tray to show."

That's our private joke. When she did Hello, Dolly! on Broadway, a beautiful sterling silver tray appeared in her home at Malibu. It was inscribed: "Thank you, Carol, for doing $8,350,000 gross. (signed David Merrick."

Years later, I casually mentioned the tray to Merrick.

"I never gave her any tray, although that is the exact gross on Broadway. It sounds like Charlie Lowe forged my name," said David.

Charlie Lowe, Carol's husband, is the best press agent I know. He once was Aimee Semple McPherson's press agent — and you still see her mentioned in print 40 years later.

Sorry to hear Misty Rowe, the shapely star of Hee Haw, was badly injured in a Nashville auto accident. She was driving boy friend Dave (Dave and Sugar) Rowland's car. It was totalled.

Robin Williams wanted to attend, but someone advising him told him not to — overexposure. His costar Pam Dawber of Mork and Mindy did show to accept awards as favorite TV show and favorite female newcomer.

Grant Tinker turned down the Photoplay Hall of Fame Award for favorite all-time. The show's producer quoted Tinker: "The Mary Tyler Moore Show is yesterday's newspaper." He ought to tell that to the millions who watch the reruns every day. They haven't heard yet.

Star giving charity $1,000 after drug charge stayed

WINNIPEG (CP) — Canadian recording star Burton Cummings agreed Monday to donate $1,000 to charity after a charge of possession of marijuana was stayed by the federal government.

Crown counsel Peter Kramer said in court that a conviction on the charge would have given Cummings a criminal record and jeopardized his work in the United States.

The charge was laid after a police spot check of Cummings' car and a subsequent search of his Winnipeg hotel room Sept. 10.

A few kind words for sharks

McKenny, a Windsor native, puts much of the blame for widespread hate and fear of the shark family on the movie Jaws but his new movie, to begin shooting next year, will change that.

The shark is "a very beautiful animal, but unpredictable, like people," said McKenny, who went from being a diver with the local utilities commission to doubling for such Hollywood actors as Nick Nolte.

"And the risk of being eaten alive in the water is almost non-existent."

Jaws also cost the diving industry millions of dollars, McKenny said, because people stayed away from the water after seeing the terrifying mechanical shark in action.

McKenny, 41, lives in Los Angeles but began his career diving in the cold, murky waters of the Great Lakes and the Detroit River when he was 15, and took up underwater photography five years later.

In his hometown to promote an underwater film festival, McKenny recalled that his first pictures were taken with a box camera wrapped in a plastic bag.

As a double for Nolte in the movie The Deep, McKenny was surrounded by three movie cameras filming swarms of sharks drawn to him by cut-up fish.

The scenes, filmed off Australia's Great Barrier Reef, were not as frightening as they looked on the screen, he said. The sharks were more interested in the fish bait than in biting divers.

McKenny's first film was about shipwrecks in Georgian Bay and took first place at an international underwater film festival in California. His next film won two gold medals and that led to a contract as program director of the new Underwater Explorers Club on Grand Bahamas Island.

He stayed with the club for three years, teaching underwater photography and guiding divers through coral reefs before taking an editorial position with Skin Diver magazine.

His latest film, God's Other World—The Red Sea, included McKenny riding on the back of an eight-metre whale shark.

Orchestra pleas hit right chord

VANCOUVER (CP) — Antony D'Angelo finally got the chance to conduct a full symphony orchestra—and it only cost him $2,000.

Maestro-for-a-moment D'Angelo had one of the winning bids to conduct the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra offered at auction during the VSO'S radiothon at the weekend.

"I've always had an ambition to conduct a full symphony orchestra," said the Vancouver shoe manufacturer. "I've been involved with music for years, but this is a dream come true."

The orchestra also had its dreams come true, almost beyond its wildest hopes. The radiothon, a 60-hour broadcast on CHQM-FM raised $128,332, more than twice the target of $50,000.

That money will help offset the orchestra's deficit.

An anonymous Vancouver woman, who became involved in a bidding war with D'Angelo for the conducting honors, will lead the orchestra in an April pops concert.

Throughout the broadcast, Vancouver residents paid from $10 to $1,500 for premiums donated mainly by local businesses and individuals, as well as bidding on auction items.

For $10, there were VSO T-shirts with tasteful, musically-oriented slogans like Handel Her But Don't Mahler. For $1,500 each, conductor Miller offered a number of week-long holidays at his condominium on Grand Cayman Island.

Probably the busiest member of the orchestra is trombonist Doug Sparkes, who will spend the next six months giving music lessons, escorting women to dinner, making gourmet dinners and playing tennis.

Tympanist Don Adams offered a premium with a catch. He would escort a woman to dinner, provided she was six feet tall in her stocking feet. He is six-foot-seven.

Henry Vogel, orchestra manager with the New York Philharmonic, was in charge of the radiothon. He has handled 29 such projects for orchestras in the U.S., but this was the first for a Canadian orchestra.

Book prize to Canada

PARIS (CP) — French Canadian author Antonine Maillet has won France's most coveted literary prize, the Prix Goncourt.

Miss Maillet, 49, a native of Bouctouche, N.B., and the first woman winner in 13 years, received the award for her novel Pelagie la Charrette (Pelagie the Cart), a tale of French settlers forced to leave what are now New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in 1775 following the English conquest.

The Goncourt stirs up passions every year.

Last week, a former member of the Goncourt jury alleged that the prize was almost always awarded to books from France's three biggest publishers because they exerted pressure on the jury. Miss Maillet's book was published by Grasset, one of the big three.

The Goncourt is surrounded by elaborate ritual— occasionally marred by protest. Two years ago, jury president Armand Lanoux was struck in the face by a cream puff as he announced the winner.

Fans back to Dylan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Bob Dylan made his debut as a born-again Christian, angry San Francisco fans stalked out of the concert.

But he appeared to have made some converts Sunday at the first of four sold-out concerts here.

Dylan told about 3,000 fans about his new-found faith and sang numbers from his new album, Slow Train Coming, backed by three gospel singers.

Vulnerable: East-West. Dealer: North. The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	2 ♠	4 ♥	All pass

Opening lead: Nine of spades

South broke no law by ruffing with his highest trump. It did no good. West overruffed and a crime went on the books. An ounce of prevention could have saved the game.

South's jump to four hearts is a reasonable shot over East's overcall. Game should not be beyond reach and the heart game should be as good as any.

In theory this proved to be the case. In practice South managed to bungle the play and it turned out that game in no trumps would have been almost error-proof.

West led the spade nine and East won the trick with his jack. East then continued with the ace and another spade and South began to study.

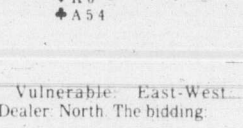

This can be bad news with some partners. A study implies a problem and a helpless dummy can only sit and wait.

And the worst came true. South remembered East's overcall and reasoned that East probably had the king of trumps. For effect, South ruffed triumphantly with his queen, but it was West who won the battle. West overruffed and led the queen of clubs and declarer eventually conceded a club and the game went one down.

Declarer's problem was a self-made one. It is true that East rated to have the king of trumps, but that was not the issue. If East did have a trump trick, declarer was going down anyway.

So instead of trying to stop an overruff, declarer should have discarded one of his sure losers -- a small club. West would ruff, but that would be all. Declarer would win the next trick, the trumps would behave and declarer would score his 10 tricks.

THERE'S STILL TIME. BUT NOT MUCH.

New submarine power lines are planned to be in service in 1983. But we have to work together to avoid problems until then.

It's up to all of us.
Residential, commercial and industrial use of electricity has grown to the point where Vancouver Island faces a shortage. Two additional submarine power lines from the mainland are planned, but the first of these cannot be completed until 1983. As things now stand, we will be hard pressed to meet present customers' demands this winter, especially during peak use hours, 5:00-7:00 p.m.

Why can't industrial use be cut?
Hydro doesn't normally restrict use of electricity by its customers. Our responsibility is to serve their needs and encourage them to use energy efficiently. More important, however, curtailment of power to industry would directly affect jobs. The largest industrial user of electrical energy on Vancouver Island is the forest industry. It also is a large source of employment on the Island. Major industries are more conscious than ever about the urgency of conserving energy and Hydro is working with them through such things as energy management seminars, and plant energy-use audits. And we will continue to assist industry in their energy conservation efforts. Industrial customers are co-operating by reducing load in emergencies, and seriously studying ways to increase their own generation of power. Until the new lines are in place, electricity for new or expanding industry will be severely limited.

Are there other options?
Only one at this time. We must all conserve energy and reduce our demand, particularly during the late afternoon-early evening peak use period. Hydro can't increase the supply in time to avert the possibility of a shortage. This is a problem we must all solve together.

Let's be more specific.
We can all help reduce the electrical demand by doing some tasks before or after the 5:00-7:00 p.m. peak use period. Set the house thermostat down five degrees celsius while cooking. Use kitchen appliances efficiently. And cut down on hot water consumption—washing dishes or laundry can usually be done just as conveniently outside of the peak period. Turn off unnecessary lights, un-watched television sets—it all helps.

B.C. HYDRO

Second in a series of messages to inform Vancouver Island people about the possible shortage of electrical energy, and effective methods of conserving energy to reduce demand.

REVERSE SPLIT
Upper Henderson
This could very likely be the first and last advertisement. This home is a reverse floor plan, split level home built in 1961. There are 3 bdrms plus den/rumpus room. The upper floor offers greater privacy for the living areas of the home and easy access to the wrap around sundeck. The spacious corner lot is hedged for privacy. And the location near the university, in the most desireable Upper Henderson area, is excellent. Exclusively offered at $92,500. My sincere regrets to those of you who respond to this ad too late. Nursing group cool to provincial education report

A major report on nursing education in B.C. is "no more than a good first step" in analyzing critical issues affecting nursing, the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. says.

In an official response, published in the latest issue of the RNABC News, to the 350-page study of nursing education by Claire Kermacks of North Vancouver the RNABC says the education ministry-commissioned study "seemed so broad in scope as to be overwhelming."

Much of the data in the report is based on current conditions, and is not a suitable base on which to project future needs, given the lack of "detailed explicit projections" for health care from the health ministry, the RNABC reaction says.

IT URGED further study on a number of critical issues raised by the Kermacks report.

Among those critical areas are provincial "competency-based" curricula for basic nursing programs, career mobility among various levels of nursing, priorities for post-basic clinical courses, and adequate funding of post-basic courses.

One of the Kermacks report's most striking recommendations calls for revision of the current three levels of nursing care—aide, practical nurse, registered nurse—to five: aide, nursing assistant, and three levels of nursing marked by different skills and responsibilities.

Kermacks' methods for determining the skills required for each level should be tested for their validity, before those or any other new categories are developed, the RNABC response says.

THE RNABC says that Kermacks' data suggests that licensed practical nurses are not even needed, since they are less likely to be employed in nursing, and have many of the same skills which registered nurses require.

The RNABC says it cannot comment on the recommendation to combined registered psychiatric nurses with regular nurses, but if such a recommendation is accepted, it will work with those involved.

Recommendations to strengthen post-basic training for nurses received strong support from the RNABC, but the association questioned naming them as the highest priority.

"While post-basic courses merit a high priority, the highest priority might be unnecessary, and costly, over-compensation for past neglect."

The RNABC also questions the idea of mobility between various levels of nursing care so that workers trained at one level can move relatively easily into training programs for higher levels.

"GIVEN THAT the 'aide' is the first level in a classification and that existing academic requirements for admission to aide programs are minimal, can safe performance at the next level be assured simply by the acquisition of additional nursing skills?"

"Preparing nursing care workers at any level requires more than the acquisition of certain nursing skills. Each worker also develops perceptions and behaviors that are appropriate to the level for which he is trained initially. It is questionable that acquiring additional skills will alter significantly the original ways of perceiving and behaving."

The Kermacks report suggests that current enrolments in aide, practical nursing and registered nursing programs should be "stabilized" until new competency-based curricula are developed and better manpower planning is done.

The RNABC responds that better health manpower planning is required before the recommendations can be acted on.

FOR REGISTERED nursing programs it "is unclear why enrolments should be stabilized when British Columbia imports more than half its new registered nurses and when the province is experiencing severe nursing shortages."

The RNABC supports development of a nursing program at Camosun (already in the planning stages) but questions a recommendation for development of a master's degree program at the University of Victoria.

"There are no data on how many nurses are ready to enter such a program. A comparable program at the University of B.C. is not oversubscribed, and faculty for a second B.C. master's program would likely be difficult to recruit, given the shortage of Canadian nurses with the necessary qualifications."

A part of Victoria history

Oldest city lawyer dies after stroke

They called him the laywer's lawyer.

Daniel Marshall Gordon, who had practised law in Victoria since 1916, and was Oak Bay's municipal lawyer since the 1940s, died Monday morning after a brief illness. He was 89 last month.

Gordon, a bachelor, was renowned in British jurisprudence for his scores of articles on administrative law and the law of quasi-judicial government functions such as labor relations.

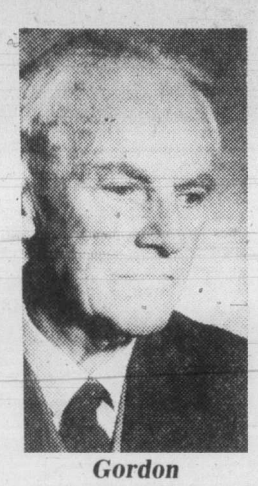

R.B. Hutchison, who worked for many years with "Marsh" Gordon at Crease & Co., said Monday night that Gordon was the oldest and longest-practising lawyer in B.C.

He received a bachelor of arts degree in 1912 from McGill while studying at the old Victoria College when it was affiliated with the Montreal university.

He was born in St. Thomas, Ont., and came to Victoria as a child with his father, who was a customs officer.

"He articled in Victoria to Alexis Martin, brother of B.C. Supreme Court Judge Archer Martin, and was admitted to the bar in 1916," Hutchison recalled.

He joined the firm of Crease Bros., Lindley and Arthur, who were sons of the first attorney-general and second judge of B.C.

Gordon
. . .started in 1916

Hutchison said Gordon, "a walking piece of Victoria history," was a man of broad interests, who played tennis until about 10 years ago. "He would never miss watching any of the big tournaments."

In addition to being a law scholar of the old school—writing in longhand and refusing to use a dictaphone, and walking to work until just a few days ago—the slight and wiry Gordon was an avid book and record collector—"probably the best-read man in Victoria," Hutchison said.

The elderly lawyer had a stroke a few weeks ago and had been making preparations to turn his extensive collection of books over to the University of Victoria shortly before his death.

Among the hundreds of cases he fought or advised on were several which went to the Supreme Court of Canada, including the celebrated A.D. Ford Estate case where Gordon successfully argued for a number of local charities to be given a $1 million bequest against a case presented by Ford's son.

"In his heyday, he even briefed Herb Davey, who later became chief justice of B.C., and continued to keep in touch with Davey in that post, offering advice and comments on decisions," Hutchison said.

In 1976, he was one of four Canadians distinguished in law to receive honorary doctor of law degrees from the University of Victoria, joining Chief Justice Bora Laskin, B.C. Chief Justice Nathan Nemetz and Queen's University law dean William Lederman.

Perhaps the tribute he would have liked most came Monday night from Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith—himself a lecturer in constitutional law at UVic—who said that in his 30 or more years of service as Oak Bay's solicitor, "he never lost a case."

School study on PR effect

The Greater Victoria Teachers' Association will conduct a survey this week to see how effective its education system public relations campaign has been.

ASSOCIATION president Trevor Calkins said his organization, which co-ordinated the $12,690 public relations campaign for school districts from Nanaimo south, and in the Gulf Islands, has just finished the three-week campaign and will conduct the survey to determine how it affected public attitudes toward education.

THE CAMPAIGN involved radio, television and newspaper advertisements in each district. Local newspaper advertisements, for instance, pointed out that pupil-teacher ratios are an unreliable guide to class sizes. In Victoria elementary schools, the association noted in its advertisement, the pupil-teacher ratio is about 19 to one, but only 22 of 436 classes had 19 or fewer pupils in them. (The pupil-teacher ratio includes virtually all staff with teaching certificates, including some such as principals, music teachers, librarians, and counsellors, who do not always have classes).

"OUR GOAL was to make people aware of the issues," Calkins said Monday.

"We will also evaluate how teachers felt about it. The campaign was also to make teachers feel that someone was out there fighting for them."

"We're not naive about what the results might be," Calkins said. He noted that 70 per cent of the population of B.C. had no family in the public education system, and that group was less likely to be influenced by the advertising campaign.

Funds for the campaign were contributed by the local associations and the B.C. Teachers' Federation, which put about $10,000 into the effort.

Doctor backs child care study before site verdict

No decisions should be made on the location and form of obstetric and pediatric services in the Capital Region until an expert and independent study of child health care has been done, an outspoken pediatrician said Monday.

Dr. Basil Boulton has served on several committees established to look into child health care in the region, and it was at his suggestion that the Capital Region hospital and health planning commission in 1977 decided to combine obstetrics and pediatrics at a single hospital in the region, although Boulton opposed the commission's decision to locate the unit at the new Victoria General Hospital on Helmcken Road.

The Royal Jubilee Hospital board announced last week that it wanted the 1977 decision reversed, at least in part, as the absence of obstetric and pediatric services would erode the base of general practitioners which Royal Jubilee needed in its medical staff to function effectively.

The board wants obstetric and pediatric primary care (care given by a general practitioner and initiated by the patient) retained at Royal Jubilee.

While suggesting that that stance is not entirely inconsistent with his strong support for single, regional facilities, Boulton said more study is needed.

"At the present time I don't think we have the facts to make a rational decision as to the best allocation of child care services, and until we have a comprehensive study, we shouldn't come to any final decision."

He indicated that the lack of information applied equally to the location of obstetric and pediatric services at either the Helmcken Road site, where current plans will put them, or at Royal Jubilee.

Boulton said input from child health experts has so far been ignored in regional decisions.

Sidney wary of airport plan

The committee of the whole decided to "proceed with caution" and ask the federal government for more information on the costs of running the Pat Bay airport.

The committee represents all council members. It was responding to a two-volume Transport Canada airport management study which suggested that local communities could take over the operation of airports, including repairs and capital costs.

Sidney Mayor Norma Sealey said in an interview following the meeting: "If the federal government is not able to run an airport economically, I don't know how they expect local communities to."

"The ways you can run an economically viable operation are limited to a number of ways. For example, landing fees and rental of facilities such as concession operations.

Sealey said that under the proposals of the study, airport employees would no longer be civil servants but would be local employees subject to local labor relations.

UVIC TO DISPLAY ART BY CHILDREN

The exhibition, organized by Tom Hudson, principal of the Emily Carr College of Art in Vancouver, with assistance from the Canadian commission for the year of the child, the education ministry and the Vancouver Foundation, is a representative selection drawn from the B.C. exhibition of children's art and will remain on display at UVic through Friday.

Selections were made from more than 5,000 pieces of children's artwork submitted by teachers from around the province.

Proceeds from the game between Saanich Braves and North Shore winter Club Flames will be donated to the B.C. Lions Society for Crippled Children.

Municipal recreation director William Young recommended against forgiveness of the $250 rental of G.R. Pearkes Arena on grounds that it would establish a precedent that could bring similar applications from charitable organizations.

"Over the years our rental policies have not deviated in this regard," he said.

Aldermen Sandy Noel, David Paterson and Fred Severson opposed the motion.

Ald. John Mika sponsored a motion which passed with dissenting votes by Ald. Irene Block, Geoffrey Vantreight and Mary Casilio, that the finance committee be asked to consider a $250 grant to help defray expenses of the hockey club.

Saanich will consider local pub at old hall

The former Saanich municipal hall on West Saanich Road may soon become a neighborhood pub.

This became a distinct possibility Monday when aldermen gave owner H.J. Ben-Oliel an assurance it was willing to consider such a use for the building.

The property was purchased with the intention of clearing the site for retail commercial development, as permitted by the existing zoning, council was told.

Staff reports on possible uses for the building by both the municipality (should it decide to acquire the property) and the present owner, suggested the owner's proposal for a pub seating 200 patrons be entertained. In addition, there would be 3,700 square feet of office space available in the building.

Municipal administrator William Tremayne said in a report that staff had studied the possibility of using the building as a municipal facility or moving it to another site.

He said the police department was "crying out" for additional space and suggested Royal Oak was the perfect location for a new police headquarters.

Police board chairman Mayor Mel Couvelier said the site was not big enough to accommodate a new police building. He also threw cold water on a suggestion that part of the department's operation be moved to the old municipal hall, saying that the department was opposed to splitting its operations.

Ald. Mary Casilio quoted from a recent speech by Health Minister Robert McClelland on the evils of drinking to support her opposition to a neighborhood pub.

Ald. Sandy Noel said Saanich should purchase the heritage building and relocate it on municipal property. "If they can move London Bridge to Arizona, we should be able to move this building a few hundred yards."

However, Ald. Fred Severson said saving heritage buildings was going to be a costly business for Saanich. "We've got to start calling a halt to preserving old buildings."

Ald. David Paterson, warning of the cost involved in acquiring the building, said a considerable amount of money had been spent on preserving the old Captain Dodd house "and we still haven't found a use for it."

He said he could see no architectural significance to the hall and was opposed to saving it.

The play: The Passion of Dracula
The players: Victoria Theatre Guild
The theatre: Langham Court
The dates: Tonight through Saturday

A Colonist review
by JIM GIBSON

Undoubtedly there'll be moments in The Passion of Dracula when you will be wishing you'd packed along some garlic or at the very least worn a cross.

Everybody knows the legend gone Hollywood about the man with the cape and the craving for corpuscles, but still it's hard not to be swept away by it all, even in this erratic production awhirl with fog, howls and shadows on the wall.

Bob Hall and David Richmond have put together a wonderfully entertaining script that balances the compelling components of the story with some super spoofery. We laugh at the campiness of it all, only to be genuinely seduced by the horror of it.

In fairness, the script's obvious dramatic high points are met head-on, more often than not considerably helped by some inventive special effects. But Gorrie wasn't able to orchestrate the production up to those points. Dracula must maintain a pace that ensures it remains compelling throughout. Instead this production shuffles—in all but the highlight scenes—and undermines much of the script's appeal.

Much of the appeal of the Dracula story is the coupling of horror with eroticism. The count with the busy canines is not just performing a simple but crude blood transfusion. Yet this is largely the effect that Gorrie leaves with us.

When his Dracula embraces his chosen "Bride" it should be a moment so sexual that we are both aroused and disgusted. Even before the fatal embraces, his female victims should visibly be seduced by his presence, not in awe of his intellect.

Karen Frey as his chosen bride has all the gutsy and passionate elements that the character requires. And in many ways she is entirely believable. Yet she lacks the much-needed vulnerability.

Her protector Jonathan—would you believe a journalist as a young hero?—is made suitably quite likeable by Ned Lemely's nicely understated characterization.

Brian Lenton plays the butler Jameson in such a perfectly offhand way that the temptation is to say he steals the show. It's a good example of what must be done by every actor if this production is to succeed. Instead, there is some rather atrocious playing that elicits laughter when really none is intended.

Jim Leard's lovable madman Renfield, and to some degree both Robert Price's kindly professor and Lina De Guevara's doctor, were among the better characterizations.

Judge Frederick Melvin said Joseph Charles Edward LeBlanc presented himself Sept. 25 to a teller at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Fort and Government, and told her to give him $1,000.

When she said with what, he replied: "This is a holdup." She set off a silent alarm, and said she didn't have $1,000 and he asked how about $40, but she replied that she couldn't give him anything.

Melvin said the demand for money and the words "this is a holdup" could only be categorized as a threat of violence.

In sentencing LeBlanc, he said the Criminal Code recognized attempted robbery as one of the most serious offences, but this particular incident was not the most serious attempted robbery.

He took into account the almost two months LeBlanc had spent in custody, and then added he was going to do something which might prove to be an error in retrospect, but which fitted the circumstances, and he suspended sentence and issued a three-year probation order.

Also in county court, Melvin sentenced Bruce Howard Wright, 25, to three months in jail and placed him on probation for 18 months.

Wright pleaded guilty Sept. 14 to defrauding the Greater Victoria Savings Credit Union of $4,500 between March 19 and May 30 and theft of $367.11 from a credit union account May 11. He also pleaded guilty Monday to theft of $1,587.56 from the Bank of Montreal in Smithers, B.C., between Dec. 15, 1977 and Jan. 30, 1978.

Wright was accountant and administration manager at the bank and was a sub-office manager at the credit union's Langford branch.

Crown counsel Peter Birkett said the bank theft resulted from transferring of funds from dormant accounts. The credit union fraud occurred when he approved a $4,500 loan to a fictitious person and the theft was withdrawing and pocketing $367.11 from the account of someone who complained it was not hers. In fact, it belonged to another account, said Birkett.

Defence counsel Bruce McConnan produced four letters attesting to Wright's character and said restitution has been made to the credit union.

Provincial Court

A 32-year-old man who pleaded guilty to six charges Monday in Victoria provincial court received concurrent sentences, the longest a six-month term.

Michael Laforme, no fixed address, entered guilty pleas to failing to show up for a trial, driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08, and dangerous driving, and changed his plea to guilty on charges of assault by trespassing, common assault, and obtaining transport by fraud.

Judge William Ostler imposed the six-month sentence for the over .08 charge, one month for failing to appear for trial, 14 days for dangerous driving, and seven days each for the remaining three charges, all concurrent.

In chronological order, the first offence was the common assault, which occurred Jan. 25. Crown counsel Don Laughton told the court Esquimalt police were called at 2:35 a.m. to a suite at 540 Comerford. A woman who was a neighbor of Laforme's told officers that Laforme was banging on the door in search of his common-law wife, with whom he had a dispute, and was told to stop. Laforme hit her twice in the mouth and kicked her in the stomach, Laughton said.

The next incident was May 5 when Laforme was charged with assault by trespassing. On that occasion, Laughton said, Victoria police were called at 12:30 a.m. to the Kings Hotel beer parlor, where two waiters were holding Laforme. Police were told Laforme had been refused service at the pub and was barred. However, he took exception and began hassling one of the waiters, bringing the second employee to the rescue.

Then July 12, Laforme was charged with obtaining transport by fraud. He had called Victoria Taxi at 6:45 p.m. from the Douglas Hotel and was taken to 325 Wilson, where he refused to pay the $2 fare because he had no money. The driver then took Laforme to the Victoria police station on Fisgard where he was arrested and charged.

Police were called to a disturbance at 568 Yates, and were advised Laforme had left in a car. Laforme was spotted driving a vehicle about five minutes later near the Kings Hotel, and police activated their emergency equipment, prompting a high-speed chase. Before Laforme could be stopped by a roadblock put up in the 900-block Esquimalt, he had gone through a red traffic light at Catherine and Esquimalt doing an estimated 120 kmh in a 50 kmh zone and at least three cars had to swerve in their lanes to avoid Laforme's speeding vehicle. Subsequent breath-test readings of .17 and .16 were obtained, court was told.

The failing to appear charge resulted from Laforme's failure to show up for a trial on the assault by trespassing charge. He had been released on his own recognizance.

Laughton said Laforme had a lengthy criminal record for such offences as breaking and entering, uttering, impaired driving, assault causing bodily harm, assault by trespassing, escaping lawful custody, theft under $200, and breach of probation.

Defence lawyer Don Linge said all of the offences were alcohol-related, but that the common assault resulted after the woman had struck Laforme first.

A 66-YEAR-OLD man who disrupted a church service Sunday morning was given seven days in jail.

Crown counsel Wayne Smith said Harvey was at the Quadra Street entrance to the church at 10:30 with an open bottle of wine, swearing and shouting at the congregation.

Ostler replied that while Harvey may be an atheist, he had no right to deny the right of others to worship.

After the seven-day sentence was passed, Harvey shouted, "Seven days! That's no good. I want to have 30 days so I can dry out."

FINED FOR drinking-driving were: Victor Orest Kowalchuk, 15, of 1135 Bute, $400; and John Alexander Wainwright, 19, of 3338 Metchosin, $350.

Armed robbers off to pen

Two men were sentenced in Victoria County Court Monday to three years in the penitentiary for armed robbery and the separate offence of using a firearm while committing an indictable offence.

Ian Matthew Trett, 19, and Steven Frank Graham, 20, got two years for the Feb. 27, 1978, robbery of View Royal Food Market, and the minimum one year for the separate firearm offence. Both were also prohibited from having a firearm for five years.

Judge E.J.C. Stewart convicted them earlier this month after a trial in which it was said that two men, one armed with a rifle, stole between $180 and $200 from the store.

The judge said it was all very well to talk of young offenders, but his primary responsibility was to protect proprietors of small stores, which were often in isolated positions, frequently open late at night and very easy targets for marauders.

Graham, who has spent seven months in custody on the offence, has a criminal record for robbery and possession of marijuana. Trett has a criminal record of seven break-ins.

Confusion blamed for small turnout

By BILL SMITH
Colonist reporter

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier said Monday that voter confusion, not apathy, was responsible for the "lousy" 32.8 per cent turnout at the polls in Saturday's municipal election.

"The choice we ask people to make is an impossible one," he said in an interview. "How can the voter decide out of 11 candidates, most of them unknown, which will do the best job? It's Russian roulette, so they opt not to make the choice."

Couvelier, returned for a second two-year term, believes it's time Saanich studied slate politics or re-examined the ward system. The ward system was dropped by the municipality in the late 1940s.

"The democratic system can't work properly without voter turnout," he said.

"Far too many candidates are running municipally, the voter is confused and we are asking them to make an impossible decision."

He said he expected editorial writers would jump on his suggestions and accuse him of denying a person the right to run for office, "but I'm not suggesting you should legislatively curtail candidates, I'm saying we should re-examine the ward system or even slate politics in municipal elections."

When a Vancouver voter goes to the polls, he can identify with a whole slate philosophy and cast his vote accordingly, he said, but the Saanich voter was faced Saturday with making a choice of four from 11 candidates, many of whom were an unknown factor.

He agreed that the Saanich election result saw two left-wingers and two right-wing advocates elected. "But the politics of the candidates was not widely perceived by the majority of voters. This was only known to newsmen and the small minority who follow these things closely. It's only perceived by those on the inside. The vast majority were not even aware there was an election on Saturday."

Slate politics had not been introduced in Greater Victoria because it was contentious and could be described as anti-democratic, he said.

"But the fact of the matter is we are not getting democratic government because of the poor turnouts we are getting in municipal elections."

(In 1977, when there was a three-way mayoral race, the voter turnout was 33 per cent. Last year, when four aldermen were elected, turnout was only 22 per cent).

One reason for the poor turnout could be that liquor stores and beer parlors remained open. "Maybe they should be closed for municipal elections as they are on voting day in federal elections," he suggested.

Covelier said senior municipal staff had confirmed his fears that the Saanich voter list contained 25 per cent errors. "It contains names of people deceased and those who have moved away from the municipality."

There had been no municipal enumeration because Saanich could not afford the $30,000 to $50,000 needed to obtain an accurate headcount, "and because it would be outdated in six months."

Saanich, he said, should be using the provincial list of voters, and one of his priorities next year would be getting council to endorse a resolution to go to the Union of B.C. Municipalities convention asking the provincial government "to deal with this matter."

Couvelier said although he did not believe timing of the municipal election was to blame for the poor turnout, he would like to see this factor studied.

The two weeks between nomination day and the election were hardly enough for residents to find out about an unknown candidate, as at all-candidate meetings all were saying virtually the same thing.

"They only have 14 days to get elected, so the size of the block votes has an unusually high influence on the result. And that's not democracy either.

"People I have talked to have convinced me it's an impossible task we put before the voter. Somehow or other we have to find a way to make the choice simpler."

A system which would see candidates who failed to draw a certain percentage of the vote lose a deposit was, he said, worthy of consideration.

Couvelier said a suggestion he made last year that voters who failed to exercise their franchise should have their names removed from the voter list, got editorial writers hot under the collar. "But damn it all, I want to see us do something. I can't sit here holding what I consider to be a sacred trust and see such lousy support by the electorate at large."

He added it was not fair to the people holding office because "we can't credibly claim we have a mandate, so we are really only winging it. This is not in the best interests of democracy."

New cool McKenzie on top of voting

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist reporter

Two years earlier, McKenzie had barely escaped the political scrap heap by squeaking into last place.

What prompted the voters to move him from last place to first within two years?

"The voters gave me a clear message at that time," he says.

"I knew I had to completely change my approach to politics. I analysed what I'd done wrong, sought the advice of people whose opinion I respect and assumed a much lower profile," he says.

And what does McKenzie mean by assuming a lower profile?

During his first two-year-term, he went out on frequent limbs, including attacks on the Harlem Globetrotters and the Blanshard Court residents.

Immediately after the 1977 election, McKenzie changed his style. He became a hard-working, low-key alderman who rarely attacked anyone or anything with the fury that marked his first term.

And evidently, it paid off. On Saturday, McKenzie topped the polls with a narrow 11-vote lead over his colleague, Ald. Robin Blencoe.

McKenzie's new political style won't let him pressure mayor-elect William Tindall into giving him the same portfolio he's looked after for the past two years—the co-ordination of cultural activities.

"I'll take any duties the mayor sees fit to give me, although I wouldn't mind serving on the Royal Theatre Committee again, because some big decisions are going to be made with regard to the Royal," he says.

But then he adds quickly: "But I'm sure there are others on council who could do just as good a job, if not better."

Parksville first to have half of council women

Oak Bay is not the first "equal opportunity employer" council in Canada after all. Saturday's election of two women as aldermen there made it the second on Vancouver Island after Parksville.

Parksville treasurer Ed Gilman pointed out Monday that Parksville elected two women—Elaine van Horne and Ena MacGibbon—to its four-member council a year ago.

"The equal split was retained Saturday when Veronica Paterson took over MacGibbon's place on council," he said.

In Oak Bay, former school trustee Susan Brice joined veterans Isabel Craig and Shirley Dowell on the six-member council in Saturday's vote.

Incidentally, Parksville also has a woman groundskeeper, Joyce Henwood, who supervises works crews, some of them also women.

Byelections: Opposition 2, Tories 0

Dief's old seat goes NDP

The Conservatives were defeated in two federal byelections, including the late John Diefenbaker's long-safe Prince Albert seat Monday, reducing the minority government's already shaky ability to win the confidence of Parliament.

The victories of Liberal Roger Simmons in the Newfoundland riding of Burin-St. George's and New Democrat Stan Hovdebo in the Saskatchewan riding of Prince Albert prompted some MPs to predict the government may soon call an election.

"You're going to have an election in a helluva a hurry," said Stan Korchinski, a Conservative MP from Saskatchewan. "We're just hanging on by our fingertips."

Conservative MPs aided by their five Social Credit allies can muster 141 votes against 140 from the combined strength of the Liberals and NDP.

Opposition leader Pierre Trudeau sent a telegram to his new MP from Newfoundland saying the victory "warmed the hearts of Liberals across the country" and that the increased Liberal strength will "keep the Tories hopping" in the Commons.

Ed Broadbent, New Democratic Party leader, warned Clark that the Conservatives must be more obliging to the wishes of the opposition or "the government could come down."

The government's defeat in the two ridings makes it "very clear the people of Canada have sent the prime minister a message," Broadbent told reporters.

The biggest blow to the Conservatives occurred in Prince Albert, held by former prime minister Diefenbaker from 1953 until his death this August. NDP support had been growing in the constituency for several years.

New Democrat Hovdebo won 10,968 votes for an edge of 611 over Tory Kris Eggum. Liberal Clyde Harradance polled 7,321 votes.

"I'm sure Mr. Diefenbaker, wherever he is, is smiling wryly," joked Sidney Buckwold, a Liberal senator from Saskatchewan who had campaigned for Harradence. Although a Conservative, Diefenbaker was no fan of Clark.

Any hostage trial 'flagrant violation' of all laws—Carter

Colonist wire services

President Carter Monday demanded the immediate release of all American hostages in Iran, saying any move to try the captives as spies would be a "flagrant violation" of the laws of man and God.

A blunt White House statement said the government of Iran is responsible for the "immediate and safe release" of all captives. It said the United States "has a right to expect that Iran will do so."

"Worldwide outrage at the detention of the hostages would be greatly heightened by any attempt to put these diplomatic personnel on trial," the White House said.

The statement condemned Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's threat to put captive American diplomats on trial if the United States fails to hand over deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

The Iranian Moslem leader said in television interviews Sunday he would try any Americans suspected of spying unless the cancer-striken shah was returned to Iran.

The White House issued the statement after Iran released three of the 62 hostages held captive in the U.S. embassy since Nov. 4. Ten additional black and female captives were freed soon after the statement was released.

In Tehran one of the 10 American hostages awaiting release from the occupied embassy said his Moslem captors had threatened to shoot some of the prisoners if he did not co-operate.

James Hughes, 24, one of six blacks to be released along with four women, was asked whether his captors told him if he would be treated better if he co-operated.

He replied: "I was blindfolded, tied up and made to sit on a table and the guy (one of his captors) hinted in a way if I didn't tell them what they wanted to know, he said, then maybe some of us would have to be shot.

"And I told them that was the risk of the job," Hughes said. "I have only been here a month so what could I tell him?"

The disclosure came during an emotional news conference where other hostages said two more women and a black captive were still being held by the militants, presumably because they

Mortgage plan defeat 'would mean election'

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister John Crosbie Monday dared Liberals and New Democrats to force an election on the Conservatives' mortgage interest and property tax credit plan.

"This is the time for the opposition to put up or shut up," he told a rowdy Commons as he introduced the scheme for debate. "This is a good issue to have another election on."

Crosbie later told reporters that another election is possible if the minority government can't get the plan through Parliament before the Christmas recess.

"We're not here for anarchy," he said. "If the House prevents us from passing one of the key pieces of legislation in our (May 22 election) campaign platform, then I'm sure the prime minister will know what action to take."

'Whistling in graveyard'

Crosbie's threat of an early election, however, failed to stop Liberal and NDP spokesmen from condemning the tax credit plan as unjust to most Canadians and a foolish use of tax money for a government hard pressed for funds.

Liberal finance critic Herb Gray said Prime Minister Clark is "whistling past the political graveyard of his government" with talk of an early election, and NDP finance critic Bob Rae dismissed Crosbie's comments as a bid for headlines.

Neither the Liberals nor the NDP has committed itself to voting against the plan on second reading, but party spokesmen expressed no fear of an election Monday and made it clear they are not prepared to meet Crosbie's request for approval in principle of the bill within a few days.

The Conservatives intend to ignore other bills before the Commons to press for passage of the tax credit plan before Dec. 21 so that home-owners will be able to claim the first benefits when they file their 1979 income tax forms next year.

Initially, the plan would provide maximum benefits of $375 a family. The maximum credit would rise to $1,500 a year for the 1982 tax year.

Crosbie estimated that 3.8 million of Canada's 9.4 million households would benefit from the plan, with the average benefit being $590 a year once it went into full force.

About 1.1 million homeowners would receive nothing because they pay no federal taxes, and 4.5 million others — mostly those living in apartments and students — would also be excluded.

China accuses Viets of deadly incursion

PEKING (UPI) — China charged Tuesday that Vietnamese troops intruded "deep into Chinese territory" and said the incursion resulted in heavy loss of life. The Chinese Foreign Ministry sent the protest note Tuesday morning to the Vietnamese embassy in Peking, the official Xinhua news agency said.

The protest came in the same week that the two countries were expected to resume their drawn out peace talks in the Chinese capital. The talks have yielded no results.

The protest, released by the official Xinhua news agency, said Vietnamese forces shelled and machine-gunned a commune in Maguan county in China's Yunnan province.

Documents removed in caucus office raid

Three RCMP officers, armed with a search warrant, moved quietly into the Social Credit caucus offices in the legislative buildings last Friday, spent 90 minutes checking files, and left with an unspecified number of documents in their possession.

Police officials said the raid was a routine part of the investigation into the phoney letters-to-the-editor scandal.

For the past several weeks police have been questioning all persons who were, or could have been, involved in the "play-dirty" campaign tactics advocated by Socred research workers and distributed via tape recordings throughout the province.

The main thrust of the investigation is to ascertain whether the criminal code was broken by the authors of letters-to-the-editor or by those who advised the changing of signatures on such letters.

Key members of Premier Bennett's personal staff are expected to be questioned by the RCMP during the next few days, again as part of the routine investigation.

Socred caucus chairman Jack Kempf said Monday that he had not heard of the police check of caucus files until called by reporters Monday morning.

Ellen MacKay, still holding her position as a research worker in the caucus offices, said she couldn't understand why Kempf hadn't been informed, but speculated that the secretaries were "freaked out" by the police visit and had been told they were not to talk to anyone about events in the office complex.

Government to pare its CDC ownership

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced plans Monday to reduce its majority ownership of Canada Development Corp., while retaining effective control of the federal holding company established in 1971 to gain or keep Canadian ownership of various businesses.

Sinclair Stevens, president of the Treasury Board, also announced that the corporation may be used to buy up other federal companies the Conservative government wants to turn over to private ownership.

The Stevens explanation means that the government could retain at least indirect control, through its holding in the corporation, of the companies it slates for private ownership.

He said the government wants to reduce its present 66 per cent of CDC voting rights to less than 50 per cent in about six months, although the method has yet to be worked out.

The government is considering whether it can reduce its share eventually to 10 per cent, as originally set out in the 1971 legislation establishing the corporation.

That law also provides that the maximum outside shareholding in the corporation would be three per cent, leaving the government with the greatest single holding.

Stevens said at a news conference that the extent to which Ottawa reduces its CDC holding below 50 per

Yule tide floods in red

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, whose atheistic government officially frowns on religious holidays, is exporting Christmas cards for Western consumers in a controversial deal with a British company.

Although religious greeting cards are not normally sold in Moscow, the Soviet Union is printing Christmas cards with Christian and traditional British designs for export to the United Kingdom.

British critics have attacked the deal on commercial and religious grounds, but importer Michael Henderson, owner of European Greeting Card Ltd., defends his plans to buy 44 million Soviet-made Christmas cards this year.

"We are being accused of immorality and God knows what," Henderson said in an interview. "All the Soviets are doing for us is acting as a subcontractor."

The Soviet media have treated the matter lightly, suggesting that people afraid of "red" Christmas cards might also be suspicious of Britain's official red mailboxes.

The cards, all designed by British artists, include traditional coach-and-horses scenes, a madonna and child and Jesus in the manger with a donkey in the background and the three wise men, Henderson said.

Much of the criticism has come from Britain's Greeting Cards and Calendar Association, which contends the cards are being dumped on the British market at unfair prices from a country "that has historically denied Christ, denied the church and ruthlessly persecuted those who have accepted the existence of either."

Henderson, in Moscow on business, denied the dumping allegation and said that "by no means are we the cheapest cards in the U.K."

From his window a dead-end vista

The afternoon shadows spread out like spilled water over the small, barren lawn and past the remnants of a picket fence. The part of the fence that remained upright bore white freckled evidence that someone with a paint brush had once cared.

But not anymore. Not since the neighborhood had aged and absentee ownership had taken over.

The little house, like the lawn, looked anemic. The whole property was a monument to neglect.

It wasn't what Craig wanted for his wife and infant son. Not this two-room suite at the back and the dead-end view it offered—the skeleton of a forgotten car, the gate that hung limply from one rusted hinge.

First of all, Craig had wanted a place in the country where he felt that kid of his would have a chance to grow up with rosy cheeks and a clean mind. A silly dream, maybe, but it didn't matter now. It had dissipated like all the others.

Unemployment was one of those truths. God knows, Craig hadn't chosen unemployment as a way of life. But it was there, large and brutal and facing him much of the time, as it faced so many others in his age group.

He wished he had stayed in school longer. But would it really have helped? Didn't they say there were a lot of guys with degrees pounding the pavement in search of work?

He stood in front of the place the other day (he doesn't like to call it his place) watching the late afternoon shadows try without success to hide the misery.

"I guess when you're as young as the kid is it doesn't really matter much," he said, trying to persuade himself that this was so.

There had been some temporary work lately. He'd maybe get something small for his wife and son. Some inexpensive Christmas decorations would take some of the sting out of the cramped living quarters.

Craig's story is by no means unique. There are others caught in the same web in this community—too many others.

At this time each year this newspaper's readers try to make life a little better for them on Christmas Day. They do it through contributions to the Colonist 500 Fund.

Their contributions have gone a long way to help a lot of Craigs. There is no reason to believe they won't continue to do so.

Three new mayors

Cowichan Valley has record vote

DUNCAN —A record voter turnout in the Cowichan Valley had elected three new mayors, rejected a $1.75 million Crofton water referendum and approved a $60,000 North Oyster fire department referendum, by the time the municipal polls closed at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Most surprising upset of the elections throughout the Cowichan Valley was the defeat in the race for the Duncan mayor's chair of veteran municipal politician and previous six-year mayor Ken Paskin, by former alderman and local lawyer Michael Coleman, with 710 votes to Paskin's 464.

Incumbent Ald. Doug. Barker topped the aldermanic polls in Duncan with 797 votes, closely followed by incumbent Ald. John Homer with 771. The third vacant seat was won by political newcomer Ken Jacques with 644. A fourth candidate, Dan Clements polled 405.

In North Cowichan, the popular—and possibly the youngest—mayor in British Columbia, 27-year-old incumbent alderman Graham Bruce toppled incumbent mayor George Whittaker by a majority vote of 1,775.

The four-way race for the mayor's chair was completed by two other incumbent aldermen, Dennis Hogan, who polled 677, and Gerry Smith, a former eight-year mayor receiving 1,582. Whittaker polled 902 votes.

The mayoralty contest was believed responsible for the more than 57 per cent voter turnout or 5,007 from an 8,670 electorate.

The three vacant two-year aldermanic terms were won by Tom Burge 3260; Alan Hussey 2,939, Margaret Robertson 2,765. Dairy farmer Walter Smith was unsuccessful in his first bid for council, polling 2,565 votes.

Local lawyer Glen Ridgeway's 2,475 votes topped the polls for the two vacant one-year aldermanic terms on council. Also elected was realtor Paul Osborne, narrowly edging out journalist Derek Rhind. Osborne received 1,896 to Rhind's 1,810. A fourth candidate, Mel Schmidt, received 1,635.

Crofton voters rejected a $1.75 million water referendum by 363 votes to 300. Just over six months ago the residents rejected a similar water referendum by nearly the same amount of votes.

Lake Cowichan voters elected a new mayor, Ken Douglas, by 411 votes to challenger Edward Forrest's 393. The two vacant two-year term aldermanic seats were filled by Don Gordon and Roger Hamilton by acclamation.

The most interesting contest in the Cowichan Valley Regional District was in Electoral Area "C" Cobble Hill where challenger Gerry Giles polled 271 votes compared to incumbent director Maurice Simard's 268.

Returning officer Peter Hayward conducted a second check of votes and voter registrations Monday afternoon before confirming that the vote stood and Giles had been elected.

The area had been the subject of considerable controversy with Simard favoring the removal of all Class C land from the Agricultural land Reserve, which Giles opposed, stating that this would mean that all land in Cobble Hill would be removed from the ALR because all the land in Cobble Hill is classified as Class C, including the established farms in the district.

Other CVRD electoral area results are Area "D" Cowichan Bay, incumbent Lorne Campbell 141, to challenger Myrtle Haslam's 133. Area "E" Cowichan Station-Koksilah, incumbent Leo Kuta 100 votes to challenger Nigel Turner's 81.

A $60,000 North Oyster Fire Department equipment referendum was approved.

Cowichan Valley School Board District 65's four vacant two year trustee terms were won by Ann Andersen, 4,450; Dick Christmas, 4,075; Joan Gillatt, 4,027; Jerry Joyce, 3684. Unsuccessful candidates were Helen Dutch 2,566 and Ed O'Carroll 2,517.

38-cars jump tracks

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — Work continued Monday to clear the track after 11 cars of a 38-car CP Rail train jumped the track near this Vancouver Island community.

Ten of the cars, all empty, left the track completely. A tank car containing sulphur dioxide went only partially off the track and did not sustain any other damage.

A CP Rail spokesman Rail said no one was injured. He said only four cars on the train were loaded.

Tree-topping decision meets delay at standing room council session

LADYSMITH — There was standing room only in council chambers last week when 22 residents turned out to hear the decision on the contentious tree-topping proposal for the Holland Park green belt.

But there was no final decision and little discussion of the matter at council's regular session Tuesday night because resident representative Ken Carter was granted more time to seek professional advice.

Residents affected by the proposed tree-topping are divided on the issue. Those living below the green belt are worried about losing their privacy and disturbing the bird life, while those above are concerned about the danger of dead and leaning trees as well as the obstruction of their view.

Upon seeking legal advice about the town's possible liability in the event of an accident in this situation, council was informed by its legal advisor, Barrie Luff, that it would be quite risky to permit any private cutting in a residential area where there is risk to lives and property.

Ald. Ken Sutherland, a Holland Park resident, moved to set a date for a public hearing to deal specifically with the tree-topping issue.

On Monday, at 7:30 p.m. in the council chambers, both sides will have their say on the four-month-old issue and a final decision by council will be handed down at the next regular session, Monday, Nov. 26.

Poole cited shortcomings of last year's brochure, which was entirely advertisement with only one scenic photograph on the cover, and he explained that the chamber of commerce would like to model this year's brochure after Port McNeill's which has no advertising at all, and the cost, therefore, is picked up by the community.

Statistics indicate that Port McNeill's tourism rose 40 per cent in one year and Poole attributed this to the brochure.

Although Port NcNeill's brochure cost $10,000 for 25,000 copies, Poole claims Ladysmith can cut that cost by doing the work itself, in conjunction with the Ladysmith-Chemainus Chronicle, and produce 30,000 copies for $8,000.

The chamber of commerce was hoping to get $2,000 from the city, but council's decision was to let local businesses show their support first before council considers allocating funds from next year's budget for the new brochure.

The engineering firm Willis, Cunliffe, Tait and Company informed council at the regular session Tuesday night that work was proceeding at the Holland Lake Resevoir.

It appeared that the crisis situation resulting from labor disputes and a work stoppage at the damsite had been averted and Ladysmith would have water this spring and summer after all.

Ald. Ken Stewart, chairman of the water works committee, informed council, "Everything seems to be going very well at the present time."

In a second piece of correspondence from Willis, Cunliffe, Tait and Company, the engineering firm submitted its cost summary for the proposed improvements to the city's sewer system.

The work, which will entail putting in a trunk main from the existing trunk main to the intersection of Davis Road and the Trans-Canada Highway, carries a price tag of $5,630,000.

Council will be contacting the minister of the environment for financial assistance.

The bylaw, effective January, 1980, raises the annual indemnity (paid quarterly) for the mayor to $6,500 and for each alderman to $3,000.

This bylaw, which puts Ladysmith on line with the smaller town of Parksville, received some discussion when Mayor Frank Jameson stated he would like to see the salaries of the mayor and the aldermen closer together and that he would be willing to take a reduction.

The consensus of the council was that the wage disparity was justified because the mayor had more work and responsiblity than the aldermen.

The Labor Relations Board informed council Tuesday night that it was not prepared to consider School District 68's application for withdrawal from the Mid-Island Public Employers Association.

The new agreement, which has been endorsed by both the school district and the Nanaimo District Teachers Association, provides for a 9.43 per cent salary increase and .17 increase per cent in benefits.

In making the announcement, school board chairman Bill Holdom said the agreement was reached amicably.

Heading the school board's negotiating team was trustee Joy Leach, while Wendy Schram led the teachers' bargaining group.

The teachers and school districts in the province were required to agree on a new contract by midnight Nov. 15, or the settlement would go to binding arbitration.

Meanwhile, about 160 teachers took the opportunity of a regular school board meeting earlier in the week to demonstrate that they were not so happy with another action of the trustees.

The teachers showed up en masse, with signatures from teachers in 37 district schools, to ask for inclusion of associated professional development time in the board's 1980 provisional budget.

The NDTA has been pushing for APDT, which would free elementary teachers from classroom work on a regular basis, to allow time for preparation, parent consultation and other related duties.

The board went along with the idea of adding 5.4 teachers to the provisional budget, which could give elementary teachers one-half hour of release time per week.

But working out details of what the additional teachers will be used for, and whether it is even financially feasible, must remain until the work begins on the annual budget. That will be the job of the newly-elected school board.

Holdom pointed out that the addition of the teachers to the budget was more symbolic than substantive, since the final budget adopted by the board in early 1980 will not necessarily resemble the provisional budget adopted last week.

Juvenile injured

Two juveniles in a stolen car were involved in two separate accidents within a block on the Trans-Canada Highway in Duncan Monday afternoon while police were in the process of apprehending them.

RCMP had set up a road block after receiving an earlier report of a car stolen in Saanich that was believed headed for the Duncan area.

Princess Royal Day set

The annual observation of "Princess Royal Day" will be held on Tuesday, Nov. 27, to commemorate the arrival in Nanaimo of those pioneer families who sailed from England aboard the Princess Royal in 1854.

The Nanaimo Historical Society is anxious to have present this year as many as possible of the descendants of the 24 "Princess Royal Families", to mark the 125th anniversary of their arrival.

The society is still in touch with many of them, but others have moved away or are not able to attend the annual event.

Anyone who is a direct descendant and plans to represent a family at Pioneer Rock at the Bastion in Nanaimo on Nov. 27 for the short ceremony, should contact Mrs. Mar, 242 Cilaire Dr., Nanaimo, B.C., V9S 3E4, or by phone at 758-2828.

Byelections: Opposition 2, Tories 0

The Conservatives were defeated in two federal byelections, including the late John Diefenbaker's long-safe Prince Albert seat Monday, reducing the minority government's already shaky ability to win the confidence of Parliament.

The victories of Liberal Roger Simmons in the Newfoundland riding of Burin-St. George's and New Democrat Stan Hovdebo in the Saskatchewan riding of Prince Albert prompted some MPs to predict the government may soon call an election.

"You're going to have an election in a helluva a hurry," said Stan Korchinski, a Conservative MP from Saskatchewan. "We're just hanging on by our fingertips."

Dief's old seat goes NDP

Conservative MPs aided by their five Social Credit allies can muster 141 votes against 140 from the combined strength of the Liberals and NDP.

Opposition leader Pierre Trudeau sent a telegram to his new MP from Newfoundland saying the victory "warmed the hearts of Liberals across the country" and that the increased Liberal strength will "keep the Tories hopping" in the Commons.

Ed Broadbent, New Democratic Party leader, warned Clark that the Conservatives must be more obliging to the wishes of the opposition or "the government could come down."

The government's defeat in the two ridings makes it "very clear the people of Canada have sent the prime minister a message," Broadbent told reporters.

The biggest blow to the Conservatives occurred in Prince Albert, held by former prime minister Diefenbaker from 1953 until his death this August. NDP support had been growing in the constituency for several years.

New Democrat Hovdebo won 10,968 votes for an edge of 611 over Tory Kris Eggum. Liberal Clyde Harradance polled 7,321 votes.

"I'm sure Mr. Diefenbaker, wherever he is, is smiling wryly," joked Sidney Buckwold, a Liberal senator from Saskatchewan who had campaigned for Harradence. Although a Conservative, Diefenbaker was no fan of Clark.

Hostages embrace after release from embassy segregation

Any hostage trial 'flagrant violation' of all laws—Carter

Colonist wire services

President Carter Monday demanded the immediate release of all American hostages in Iran, saying any move to try the captives as spies would be a "flagrant violation" of the laws of man and God.

A blunt White House statement said the government of Iran is responsible for the "immediate and safe release" of all captives. It said the United States "has a right to expect that Iran will do so."

"Worldwide outrage at the detention of the hostages would be greatly heightened by any attempt to put these diplomatic personnel on trial," the White House said.

The statement condemned Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's threat to put captive American diplomats on trial if the United States fails to hand over deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

The Iranian Moslem leader said in television interviews Sunday he would try any Americans suspected of spying unless the cancer-striken shah was returned to Iran.

The White House issued the statement after Iran released three of the 62 hostages held captive in the U.S. embassy since Nov. 4. Ten additional black and female captives were freed soon after the statement was released.

In Tehran one of the 10 American hostages awaiting release from the occupied embassy said his Moslem captors had threatened to shoot some of the prisoners if he did not co-operate.

James Hughes, 24, one of six blacks to be released along with four women, was asked whether his captors told him if he would be treated better if he co-operated.

He replied: "I was blindfolded, tied up and made to sit on a table and the guy (one of his captors) hinted in a way if I didn't tell them what they wanted to know, he said, then maybe some of us would have to be shot.

"And I told them that was the risk of the job," Hughes said. "I have only been here a month so what could I tell him?"

The disclosure came during an emotional news conference where other hostages said two more women and a black captive were still being held by the militants, presumably because they

Mortgage plan defeat 'would mean election'

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister John Crosbie Monday dared Liberals and New Democrats to force an election on the Conservatives' mortgage interest and property tax credit plan.

"This is the time for the opposition to put up or shut up," he told a rowdy Commons as he introduced the scheme for debate. "This is a good issue to have another election on."

Crosbie later told reporters that another election is possible if the minority government can't get the plan through Parliament before the Christmas recess.

"We're not here for anarchy," he said. "If the House prevents us from passing one of the key pieces of legislation in our (May 22 election) campaign platform, then I'm sure the prime minister will know what action to take."

'Whistling in graveyard'

Crosbie's threat of an early election, however, failed to stop Liberal and NDP spokesmen from condemning the tax credit plan as unjust to most Canadians and a foolish use of tax money for a government hard pressed for funds.

Liberal finance critic Herb Gray said Prime Minister Clark is "whistling past the political graveyard of his government" with talk of an early election, and NDP finance critic Bob Rae dismissed Crosbie's comments as a bid for headlines.

Neither the Liberals nor the NDP has committed itself to voting against the plan on second reading, but party spokesmen expressed no fear of an election Monday and made it clear they are not prepared to meet Crosbie's request for approval in principle of the bill within a few days.

The Conservatives intend to ignore other bills before the Commons to press for passage of the tax credit plan before Dec. 21 so that home-owners will be able to claim the first benefits when they file their 1979 income tax forms next year.

Initially, the plan would provide maximum benefits of $375 a family. The maximum credit would rise to $1,500 a year for the 1982 tax year.

Crosbie estimated that 3.8 million of Canada's 9.4 million households would benefit from the plan, with the average benefit being $590 a year once it went into full force.

About 1.1 million homeowners would receive nothing because they pay no federal taxes, and 4.5 million others — mostly those living in apartments, and students — would also be excluded.

China accuses Viets of deadly incursion

PEKING (UPI) — China charged Tuesday that Vietnamese troops intruded "deep into Chinese territory" and said the incursion resulted in heavy loss of life. The Chinese foreign ministry sent the protest note Tuesday morning to the Vietnamese embassy in Peking, the official Xinhua news agency said.

The protest came in the same week that the two countries were expected to resume their drawn out peace talks in the Chinese capital. The talks have yielded no results.

The protest said Vietnamese forces shelled and machine-gunned a commune in Maguan county in China's Yunnan province.

Documents removed in caucus office raid

Three RCMP officers, armed with a search warrant, moved quietly into the Social Credit caucus offices in the legislative buildings last Friday, spent 90 minutes checking files, and left with an unspecified number of documents in their possession.

Police officials said the raid was a routine part of the investigation into the phoney letters-to-the-editor scandal.

For the past several weeks police have been questioning all persons who were, or could have been, involved in the "play-dirty" campaign tactics advocated by Socred research workers and distributed via tape recordings throughout the province.

The main thrust of the investigation is to ascertain whether the criminal code was broken by the authors of letters-to-the-editor or by those who advised the changing of signatures on such letters.

Key members of Premier Bennett's personal staff are expected to be questioned by the RCMP during the next few days, again as part of the routine investigation.

Socred caucus chairman Jack Kempf said Monday that he had not heard of the police check of caucus files until called by reporters Monday morning.

Ellen MacKay, still holding her position as a research worker in the caucus offices, said she couldn't understand why Kempf hadn't been informed, but speculated that the secretaries were "freaked out" by the police visit and had been told they were not to talk to anyone about events in the office complex.

Government to pare its CDC ownership

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced plans Monday to reduce its majority ownership of Canada Development Corp., while retaining effective control of the federal holding company established in 1971 to gain or keep Canadian ownership of various businesses.

Sinclair Stevens, president of the Treasury Board, also announced that the corporation may be used to buy up other federal companies the Conservative government wants to turn over to private ownership.

The Stevens explanation means that the government could retain at least indirect control, through its holding in the corporation, of the companies it slates for private ownership.

He said the government wants to reduce its present 66 per cent of CDC voting rights to less than 50 per cent in about six months, although the method has yet to be worked out.

The government is considering whether it can reduce its share eventually to 10 per cent, as originally set out in the 1971 legislation establishing the corporation.

That law also provides that the maximum outside shareholding in the corporation would be three per cent, leaving the government with the greatest single holding.

Stevens said at a news conference that the extent to which Ottawa reduces its CDC holding below 50 per

Yule tide floods in red

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, whose atheistic government officially frowns on religious holidays, is exporting Christmas cards for Western consumers in a controversial deal with a British company.

Although religious greeting cards are not normally sold in Moscow, the Soviet Union is printing Christmas cards with Christian and traditional British designs for export to the United Kingdom.

British critics have attacked the deal on commercial and religious grounds, but importer Michael Henderson, owner of European Greeting Card Ltd., defends his plans to buy 44 million Soviet-made Christmas cards this year.

"We are being accused of immorality and God knows what," Henderson said in an interview. "All the Soviets are doing for us is acting as a subcontractor."

The Soviet media have treated the matter lightly, suggesting that people afraid of "red" Christmas cards might also be suspicious of Britain's official red mailboxes.

The cards, all designed by British artists, include traditional coach-and-horses scenes, a madonna and child and Jesus in the manger with a donkey in the background and the three wise men, Henderson said.

Much of the criticism has come from Britain's Greeting Cards and Calendar Association, which contends the cards are being dumped on the British market at unfair prices from a country that has historically denied Christ, denied the church and ruthlessly persecuted those who have accepted the existence of either."

Henderson, in Moscow on business, denied the dumping allegation and said that "by no means are we the cheapest cards in the U.K."

From his window a dead-end vista

The afternoon shadows spread out like spilled water over the small, barren lawn and past the remnants of a picket fence. The part of the fence that remained upright bore white freckled evidence that someone with a paint brush had once cared.

But not anymore. Not since the neighborhood had aged and absentee ownership had taken over.

The little house, like the lawn, looked anemic. The whole property was a monument to neglect.

It wasn't what Craig wanted for his wife and infant son. Not this two-room suite at the back and the dead-end view it offered—the skeleton of a forgotten car, the gate that hung limply from one rusted hinge.

First of all, Craig had wanted a place in the country where he felt that kid of his would have a chance to grow up with rosy cheeks and a clean mind. A silly dream, maybe, but it didn't matter now. It had dissipated like all the others.

Unemployment was one of those truths. God knows, Craig hadn't chosen unemployment as a way of life. But it was there, large and brutal and facing him much of the time, as it faced so many others in his age group.

He wished he had stayed in school longer. But would it really have helped? Didn't they say there were a lot of guys with degrees pounding the pavement in search of work?

He stood in front of the place the other day (he doesn't like to call it his place) watching the late afternoon shadows try without success to hide the misery.

"I guess when you're as young as the kid is it doesn't really matter much," he said, trying to persuade himself that this was so.

There had been some temporary work lately. He'd maybe get something small for his wife and son. Some inexpensive Christmas decorations would take some of the sting out of the cramped living quarters.

Craig's story is by no means unique. There are others caught in the same web in this community—too many others.

At this time each year this newspaper's readers try to make life a little better for them on Christmas Day. They do it through contributions to the Colonist 500 Fund.

Their contributions have gone a long way to help a lot of Craigs. There is no reason to believe they won't continue to do so.
